There are words that resonate with Tom Wurth.

You will hear him talk about “staying constant,” being “real” and “natural.”

They resonate in the songs he writes, those he chooses to record and in every aspect of his career.

It isn't that Tom Wurth does not embrace change and growth.

He has experienced a lot of that musically as he met milestone after milestone in his career.

At the same time though, he believes music can be a “constant” for most people and they crave consistency from an artist.

Whether you sit down to talk about his career, where he has been, where he is going; or listen to the lyrics of each song, you will know his commitment to that real and natural music.

It is music you can count on with every song and at every show.

The new album A Different Soul shows that commitment.

There are deep roots that brace this album.

Roots from his small town up-bringing to his musical roots that are evident with the collaborations found on this new project which includes Vince Gill, T. Graham Brown and John Ford Coley.

Out of the gate, at only 20 years of age, Tom Wurth was nominated for a Grammy.

That particular milestone built a foundation for his career.

The Grammy experience fresh in his mind, Wurth pushed forward
