BY REV. NORVIN C. DUNCAN

It is no wonder that many working people have lost faith in the Church. Just as soon as they begin to think at all about some things they begin to question. The other day I read a poem in a weekly paper written by a child which reflected the old idea that it made no difference how one lived here, because "over yonder" they would have a glorious time. What can a Church expect if it tries to put people to sleep by promises of a great time "over yonder," but which never exerts itself to make living conditions in this world more tolerable?

I realize fully that relatively this life is very short compared to eternity, but I am also convinced that development in this life has a great deal to do with conditions in the after-life. Jesus stood in the midst of the world into which He came and cried, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." That should be the consciousness of the Church today. Jesus, by His acts of healing and help showed the way to constructive service. Building the kingdom of God in this present world is the business of a Christian, not merely to get on the safe side, and save his own soul. Other-worldliness is often a cloak for social injustice, an excuse for stinginess and laziness.

The Church has a constructive program. The members who are in it merely to save their own souls are not so much salt, leaven, and light as they are hindrances to the bringing in of the Kingdom. We are saved together, socially and spiritually, if we are saved at all. The Church must build today, or lose her place. Not that the Church should enter politics. Her work is creative. She should protest against injustice, and proclaim incessantly the principles on which the kingdom is built. The spirit of the kingdom is within, but it takes on an outward form, and the prophet of righteousness should know what it is and declare it.
