End Play Problem

Here's a Teaser for Franklin Bridge Players

A visiting contract player has been asking Franklin bridge addicts to solve a neat little end play problem. It involves a delicate squeeze, which must be timed exactly right. Here is the problem:

Bridge problem diagram showing card layouts for North and South hands.

Hearts are trumps. South must lead and take all six tricks. This is a double dummy problem, with all hands exposed, so perfect defense is assumed on the part of East and West.

INTEREST LAGS AS COURT ENDS

Civil Cases Don't Fetch Crowds; Macon Likes Its Trials Hot

Court's over and all's quiet on the square. The lawyers said their last say Friday afternoon before Judge H. Hoyle Sink and departed, not to return until next term, which is in November.

The last few days of court were given to civil cases, most of them of little interest to anyone save lawyers and litigants. Attendance, which packed the court room to the standing-room-only point during the criminal cases, dwindled to a few bored farmers, who hadn't much else to do these days anyway.

Stallcup Will Upheld

One decision civil case that interested a number of persons was that of the W. R. Stallcup will. The jury found that the will was a true one, had been properly drawn, and that Mr. Stallcup was in his right mind and was not unduly influenced by anyone when he signed it.

The executrix was ordered to pay the sum of $750 to the clerk's office sometime during the next twelve months to the caveators, Irene Lanier, Burdell Furr and Houghton Williams.

The Bank of Franklin, suing to recover $1,510.47 from Fred Henderson, won its case.

Lewis Derberry, who pleaded nolo contendere to a charge of carrying a concealed weapon, was recognized in the sum of $100 to appear at the November term. Prayer for judgment was continued.
