WATER SUPPLY ISSUE REVIVED

Subject Bobs Up Again After Modification of PWA Provisions

Discussion of a new water supply system for Franklin to be financed with PWA funds bobbed up again this week.

The issue which was disposed of by an overwhelmingly negative vote in a special election last January has been revived on account of recent modifications of the PWA plan of financing and liberalization of North Carolina laws in regard to issuing bonds.

Under the proposal upon which the voters decided in January the town was to receive an outright grant from the government of 30 per cent of the costs of labor and materials and was to obtain the balance of the money needed in return for bonds, supported by a pledge of the community's credit, the bonds to bear four per cent interest.

Grants Increased

The government now will make outright grants of 45 per cent of the total cost of an approved project and, if the project is classed as self-liquidating, it is not necessary to pledge the community's credit. In other words, the bonds constitute a lien only against the project itself. In view of this, it is thought possible that Franklin might now build a new water system without increasing its tax rate, although it might be necessary to raise water rates.

Until this year bonds issued by North Carolina units have pledged the general credit of the borrowing community; but a bill was enacted at the last session of the General Assembly modifying this provision so that communities could issue bonds on self-liquidating projects, pledging only the receipts from the project after it has been put in operation. Under this provision, if the PWA approved a new water supply system for Franklin as a self-liquidating project, the bonds could be ordered sold by the board of aldermen without calling an election by the people.

Objections Raised

Some residents are inclined to think that in view of these changes Franklin should file a new application for a PWA grant and loan to construct a new water supply system. On the other hand, some new objections have been voiced by persons who have carefully studied the new PWA provisions. One of the principal objections is that 90 per cent of the labor used must be recruited from relief rolls. This would penalize the man who has not "gone on relief" and, one man commented, "it would place a premium on indolence." Another objection is that the new PWA regulations require that wages be in the form of a salary; workmen would be paid, rain or shine, work or no work, for a certain number of hours a month.

The pros and cons of the question are expected to come up for discussion when the board of aldermen hold their regular monthly meeting next Monday night. Mayor George Patton said Wednesday that the board had considered convening in special session sometime this week to study the matter, but it had later been decided to wait until the regular meeting.

CARMAK HEARD BY ROTARIANS

Florida Man Sees Fine Op- portunity Here for Resort Center

Surrounded by beautiful mountains and possessing a temperate climate, Franklin affords a fine opportunity for development as a resort center, Major J. Frank Carmak, retired army officer of Tampa, Fla., told the Rotary club at its weekly luncheon meeting Wednesday.

If the glorious endowments nature has bestowed on this section were advertised and more facilities provided for entertaining visitors, Major Carmak said, Franklin would attract thousands of people here every year.

Major Carmak, who was the first major in the United States army wounded in combat during the World War, is a guest at Trimont Inn. He plans to spend the summer here and has been instrumental in bringing a number of other Florida people to Franklin and Highlands.

"Sure Money Crop"

Declaring that tourists are a "sure money crop," Major Carmak pointed out that Florida, despite loss of its orange crop, has been able by virtue of its tourist business to surpass other states of the union in overcoming the effects of the depression. Having spent much time in resorts from Nova Scotia to Florida and from North Carolina to California, Major Carmak qualified as an expert on the tourist business. Millions of dollars are spent each year by tourists in places which lack the natural charms possessed by Franklin, he declared.

"God has given you mountains of marvelous beauty and an unsurpassed climate," the speaker continued. "The United States government and the State of North Carolina have given you fine roads. You are the center of an area of large population from which tourists can be drawn by the thousands. You are more accessible to a greater number of people than either Florida or California. It is only a two days trip from New York and one day from St. Louis."

Must Use Opportunities

But it remains for the people of Franklin, he added, to take advantage of its marvelous opportunities. He praised those who have developed the Franklin golf course and recreational center and said that this should be a nucleus around which efforts in the future should be concentrated. He suggested that everyone in the community should join the golf club and lend their support in improving its recreational facilities. In addition he urged the construction of resort hotels and summer cottages and advised the people of the community to become tourist conscious, to be hospitable to visitors, to advertise the advantages of this section and "to boost, not knock."

At present there are 12 test farms in the county and it is thought possible that this number may be tripled.
