

ODAY and OMORROW

GET . . . for comfort took a trip to West Virginia other day and in the Pullman per in which I returned I came as a new and interesting gad-This is a ventilating fan built the side of the car between the dows, with a filter to keep the ke and cinders out and a nozcan be turned in any direction, le the passenger, either sitting or lying down, can regulate the of the fan and the volume fresh air at will.

his to my mind is a very long in the direction of making rail-travel more comfortable. I e, long believed that the real son why people have developed a marked preference for the omobile over railroads is that can control the fresh air supin your own car. I never slept ter than I did on the C & O m White Sulphur Springs to w York with the aid of this new aget.

AVEL . . . increases have done quite a bit of rail-d traveling in the past few eks and have talked with a great ny railroad men. My observa-n, which the railroad people firm, is that more people are veling now than at any time in past ten years. The sudden sh of traffic to the railroads is e largely to the reduced fares hich went into effect on the first June. People feel that they are t paying an exorbitant price for ansportation when they can move out the country for two cents a le.

Railroad men, moreover, tell me at the roads are earning more oney because of the increased affic than they would under the d higher rates. That is another roof of the fallacy of the idea at when things are sold cheaply they must be sold at a loss. We ught, by this time, to have learn-d that low prices to the consumer mean a wider distribution, greater roduction and better profits.

LIGHT . . . speed
The fast passenger-carrying flights of the giant new "Clipper" planes cross the Pacific have just been made. The newspaper men who ent along on these aerial voyages of adventure report that for com-ort and the thrills of following the ail of the early explorers along the islands of the Pacific nothing n their experience has ever reached ms.

Three newspaper reporters who set out to break the existing records for traveling around the world have exceeded expectations and have demonstrated that there are several routes available to everybody by which anyone can completely circumnavigate the globe in less than three weeks. The flying speed of these big new multipasenger planes is still considerably under what would be necessary to fly around the world in one day.
Some day we shall see planes and ships capable of a speed of 500 miles an hour, which, at the latitude of Quebec, could literally follow the sun around the world, completing the journey in 24 hours.
That is not an idle dream. It is a possibility which will be realized as soon as evidence accumulates a sufficient demand for such a service to make it commercially profitable.

DIRIGIBLES . . . practical Negotiations between the Zeppelin company, which has built and operates the largest and most successful airships, and the United States Government, looking toward the building in this country of a fleet of lighter than air craft to establish regular passenger lines all over the world, are said to be progressing very well.

No government subsidy is understood to be involved; merely an exchange of facilities. The building of dirigibles in this country got a black eye when the two largest, constructed for our Navy, both crashed. There have been no fatal disasters in the case of commercial passenger-carrying dirigibles. Like most other lines of business which apparently thrives better under private control and operation than under government direction.

WORKERS . . . jobs for skilled

Really skilled workers in any of the building trades have never been too plentiful. Right now they are especially hard to find. A real building boom is beginning in the East and every competent carpenter, plumber, bricklayer, plasterer, electrician and painter has more work than he can attend to. I am having some work done on my new home in Bucks County, Pennsylvania, and have been amazed at the scarcity of good workmen.

This scarcity is likely to be even more noticeable because there have been so few apprentices in the building trades in the past few years. One of the largest New York City building contractors told me the other day that his business was facing a genuine labor shortage.

All of this confirms my belief that the man who is a master of his craft and really wants to work is seldom unemployed for long.
