Cold Frame

Will Help Gardeners Get Early Start

A cold frame will help gardeners get an early start with their early vegetables, said H. R. Niswonger, extension horticulturist at State college.

Seed may be sown in shallow boxes in the house, and after the plants come up they may be transplanted to a cold frame to harden before they are set out in the open garden or field.

Niswonger said cabbage, cauliflower, lettuce, tomato, pepper, eggplant, and other such vegetables may be started this way.

The seed may be sown in the shallow boxes the latter part of January or early in February, he continued.

A cold frame resembles a tobacco seed bed, he said, although the two are not exactly alike.

The wooden frame enclosing the bed should be 15 to 18 inches high along the back and 8 to 10 inches high along the front side. For the average home garden the bed should be 6 feet wide and 24 feet long.

Wires or wooden slats placed across the top of the bed will help hold the cover cloth off the plants. The cloth may be second-hand sash or bleached muslin. Muslin saturated with linseed oil will hold warmth in the bed and shed rain water.

The cold frame should be located in a sunny place, facing the south. Six inches of good loam soil mixed with garden manure should be placed within the frame.

Plants may be transferred from the seed boxes to the frame when they have developed two leaves. Set them two to four inches apart. They may be transplanted to the garden when they begin to crowd or when all danger of frost or freezing is past.

Ventilation should be provided even on cold days. As the weather gets warmer, the cover should be rolled back a little more each day to harden the young plants. They should be watered on mornings when the temperature is rising.
