

Says Potatoes Make Excellent Hog Feed

Irish potatoes boiled in salt water make a good, inexpensive hog feed, said H. W. Taylor, extension swine specialist at State college.

The bumper crop of potatoes produced in eastern North Carolina this spring have driven prices to a low point and made second grade and cull potatoes available at an unusually low cost, he added.

Inferior grade spuds can be fed to hogs profitably, he continued, and this will help reduce the surplus that demoralized the market.

But be careful not to feed raw Irish potatoes, he continued, as they may injure the porkers.

Cooked spuds are nutritious and harmless if fed with corn, fish meal or tankage, and pasturage, Taylor explained. Three to four pounds of potatoes have about the same feed value as a pound of corn.

With each three to four pounds of spuds, he said, feed at least a pound of corn. Too many spuds will throw the ration out of balance.

If the potatoes are boiled in salt water they will be more palatable, and will furnish part of the salt the animals need. The salt water, however, should be thrown away, as it is harmful to hogs.

When thoroughly cooked, the spuds are easily digested and are a good source of minerals, carbohydrates, and vitamins. The skins also provide roughage.

Says Meadow Is His Most Fertile Field

One of the most productive fields on the farm of Joe Brown, in Madison county, has not been plowed in 63 years.

It has been reseeded only once, and that was just after a flood some years ago had covered the field with several inches of silt.

This two-acre meadow along a creek running through his farm produces four to five tons of high quality hay ever year, and occasionally it is used to pasture cattle over the winter.

Brown told George W. Miller, farm agent of the State college extension service in Madison county that the sod of perennial grasses and legumes is so thick that none of the soil has been lost in the past 63 years.

But from time to time when the creek rises, deposits of silt are left on the meadow, and today it has a fertile topsoil several feet deep.

The spongy, porous topsoil will soak up large quantities of rain water and hold it long after the rain has stopped falling, Brown said. Thus the meadow is little affected by long, dry spells.

Miller commented that this one field is a good demonstration of the value of good land in making productive pastures, and of the importance of soil-conserving crops to check erosion, conserve moisture, and build up soil fertility.

Pasturage is the cheapest form of dairy and beef cattle feed to be found in the State, he continued. Yet many farmers fail to take advantage of the possibilities they have for making good, permanent pastures. As a result, livestock production costs are higher in North Carolina than in most of the other states.
