WPA Gives Impetus To State Library Service

By GEO. W. COAN, JR.,
State WPA Administrator

Books! It's in the Books! Everything within the knowledge of man is in the books! Want to know how to make a wheel-barrow? What's the present economic trend? The law applicable to a given case? The cause and cure of that disease? Want entertainment? Go to the books. "That which is past is prologue" is graven on the entrance to the National Archives building in Washington. Truly what has gone before is the basis of the future.

Lincoln and countless thousands trudged many weary miles to borrow a book and return it. The procurement of a good tome was an event in those days. Strange to relate, that is just as true for millions today in these United States. Especially so in states whose populations are preponderantly rural. Why? Two main causes—thousands without funds necessary to make the purchase—lack of library and distribution facilities. The state and other libraries, the TVE extension service possess many good books. The problem includes conditioning used books and servicing county and school libraries, the crossroad store, the factory and the rural home.

Before WPA

In North Carolina, 1935, 35 counties had partial library service, 34 counties had county and city library service, while 41 counties were without any type of library service. The legislative appropriation for the state library commission was $9,288 while county and city combined expenditures, including private donations, were $180,277. The year of 1935 also found many North Carolinians needy, unemployed. Hundreds, men and women, were "white collar" workers, some of whom knew library work, others could by training acquire the talents of bookmending, cataloging, indexing, library service and extension. North Carolina sorely needed such additions for its welfare. In accordance with WPA fundamentals, the state-wide library project was formulated. To this worthwhile, socially useful enterprise, hundreds suited to and eligible for this type of work relief were assigned.

WPA Training Courses

Intensive training courses in bookmending and library science have been continuously conducted by skilled WPA supervisors to the end that each worker might be motivated and assisted in doing efficient work on his or her particular project. New libraries have been opened, old ones enlarged. They and those to come will find skilled workers. A greater number of our citizenry is being better equipped for private employment by WPA development of human resources, through the library instruction periods.

The Change

Now, 95 counties have library service. In 159 public library units, WPA workers are assisting with the clerical work, routine duties, keeping open longer hours. In the schools, 545 WPA units are operating. Three hundred of these are making the libraries available for student use during the entire school day—while many of these would not be open save for the WPA librarians. In schools where trained, other than WPA, heads are employed, the WPA workers assist with magazine and pamphlet collections, with accessioning and cataloging and repairing books, keeping the rooms arranged, attractive. In book repair units, over 900,000 public school text books and library volumes have been repaired and returned to circulation.

Bookmobiles

North Carolina has 15 bookmobiles. WPA operates eight of these, through its library and adult education projects, in the counties of Cleveland, Catawba, Montgomery, Warren, Surry, Rutherford, Anson, and a tri-county bookmobile serving Ashe, Alleghany and Watauga. Warren county library began bookmobile service in November.

The North Carolina Library Commission has a bookmobile which is loaned free to counties for demonstration. The county library plans the trips and supplies gas and oil. WPA assigns a driver and a library worker. Books are made available by the county library and the North Carolina Library Commission. This vehicle is "booked-up" far into 1939.

Bookmobiles which operate on regular schedules and which take books to all sections of the counties, have proved that people are anxious for good books to read. Books are loaned to individuals, schools and community centers. All types of books are requested, books on current events, on auto-mechanics, on bee raising, books of poems, as well as good stories of adventure or romance.

The Need is Still Great

Out of economic necessity has evolved this great service to Tar Heels, furrowing new ground. Much of the field still lies fallow. The 1936-37 annual library report discloses that about one-half of the population of this state is without public library service. Other than providing worthwhile employment for many in distress, the WPA objective is to awaken interest throughout the state to the end that permanent library programs be established.

Gen. Lee's Joke

Have you thought of Robert E. Lee as a man who thoroughly enjoyed a good joke? One cold evening he invited a group of young officers in to partake of a two-gallon jug of some "very fine stuff" sent by a friend. Ceremoniously Lee filled their cups—with buttermilk.—The Progressive Farmer.
