Several guests were present from surrounding towns including Lions from Sylva, Clayton, Ga., Asheville, and Winston-Salem, representatives of the Franklin Rotary Club and other invited guests. Places were laid for about 70, in the dining room of Hotel Edwards, and the menu consisted of chicken, ham, sweet potatoes, butter beans, celery, salad, hot rolls, pudding and coffee.

Lion Hugh Montieth, of Sylva, was the principal speaker of the evening. District-Governor Walker, of Winston-Salem, also spoke briefly and presented the charter. The Lions Club of Sylva presented the local club with a bell. Several guests were introduced and asked to speak briefly.

Following the dinner, which was interspersed with singing by the entire group, led by Tail-Twister Dupree, the guests adjourned to Helen's Barn where a square dance was greatly enjoyed by all.

Watson's Pen Picture Of Corn Planting Time

More than a quarter-century ago the famous agrarian leader and scholar, Tom Watson of Georgia, wrote this pen picture of the beauty of spring in the rural South at corn-planting time. The Progressive Farmer presents it as its April "Agricultural Classic":

The bluebird was out today, out in his glossiest plumage, his throat gurgling with song.

For the sunlight was warm and radiant in all the South, and the coming spring had laid its benediction on every field and hedge and forest.

The poplar leaves are now as big as squirrel ears and it's "time to plant corn."

Look north, look east where the sun rises, look south, look west where the sun sets—on all sides the scene is the same. In every field the steady mule, the steady plowman, and the children dropping corn.

The smell of newly plowed ground mingled with the subtle incense of the yellow jasmine and from every orchard a shower of the blossoms of peach and apple and pear was wafted into the yard and hung lovingly on the eaves and in the piazzas of the old homestead—the old and faded homestead.

Was there a cloud in all the sky? Not one, not one.

On such a day, such a cloudless, radiant, flower-sweetened day, the horseman slackens the rein as he rides through the lanes and quiet fields, and he dares to dream that the children of God once loved each other.

On such a day one may dream that the time might come when they would do so again.
