DR. COKER DOING RESEARCH WORK HERE

Dr. William C. Coker, professor of botany at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, Mrs. Coker, with four university students are spending six weeks in Highlands.

Dr. Coker spends each summer in Highlands making collections of specimens in his research laboratory.

Dr. Coker and two of the students are working on fungi. One of the other students is working on flowering plants and ferns, while the other is working on a primitive organism called slime mold.

There are two students from Duke university working on lichens and animals.

Dr. E. E. Reinke and three students from Vanderbilt university are working on salamanders.

The groups are gathering the specimens to add to the collections at their universities.

This research laboratory, where leading scientists gather each summer to study and experiment, is supported by the University of North Carolina, Duke university, and Vanderbilt university, with occasional contributions from individuals. Five scholarships are made available this year by these universities and all of the students are working on botany or zoology.

The University of North Carolina has the largest collection of plants of any institution in the South. The number of specimens now totals above 75,000. This university recently purchased the collections of the late Professor T. G. Harbison, well-known plant explorer, who made Highlands his home for many years.

B. Y. P. U. ACTIVITIES

Mrs. Potts gave the introduction to the lesson on missionaries and the following members took part: Guy Paul, Mrs. Potts, Mildred Littleton, Paul Waldon and Doris Potts. The B. Y. P. U. had a picnic last Tuesday night at Vanhook camp. Mrs. Pearl Potts was chaperon and every one seemed to have a good time.

Miss Sarah Guilder has returned from Eufaula, Ala., where she attended the funerals of her sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Russell. Miss Guilder has our sincere sympathy.

INSULL PASSES

Memories of the titanic days when he was the utility king of America were recalled in the recent death of Samuel Insull in Paris. The famous Chicagoan passed away at the age of seventy-eight. The utility company empire he erected in his heyday crashed after the 1929 stock market panic, causing the loss of billions to investors. Insull, who came to America as a poor young man, rose rapidly to success. He was secretary to Thomas A. Edison for a number of years before he undertook the erection of his utility empire.
