Pastures Should Be Seeded In February

Feed cost per 100 pounds of milk is only half as much during the summer pasture period as it is in the winter, says John A. Arey, dairy specialist of the State college extension service, in urging that adequate pastures be provided for dairy herds this year.

"On some farms where the acreage in pasture is not adequate to supply good grazing for the herd throughout the season, an additional acreage should be prepared at once and seeded between February 15 and March 15," Arey stated. "Because of the likelihood of dry weather during the spring it is advisable to seed during February from the coast to the mountains. Later seedings will give satisfactory results in the mountains."

The dairy specialist also advised that old pastures with thin places in the sod be reworked during February. "These places should be scarified with a harrow, reseeded and given a coating of manure. If manure is available the entire pasture should be given a light coating during February. On farms where manure is not available, thin pasture sods can be improved by applying 300 to 400 pounds per acre of a high grade fertilizer early in March," Arey explained.

A comparison of two North Carolina herds from records of the Dairy Herd Improvement association shows the economic value of good pasture. One herd had adequate pasture and the other had very little. The comparative feed costs per 100 pounds of milk ran close together until May, then the herd with the good pasture was fed at the cost of 70 cents per 100 pounds of milk while the other herd's cost was $1.17. This wide difference continued through October, with one month showing a variation of 58 cents and $1.29.

FAULTY

From the standpoint of nutrition, 40 to 60 per cent of family diets of white employed city workers appear to be in need of improvement and the same is true for about 60 per cent of the diets of Negro families, the federal bureau of home economics found in a recent study.

One hundred and seventy-one war veterans are now members of the lower house of Congress, and 24 are members of the Senate, the greatest ever to sit in the legislative body.

The jobs of 3,000,000 WPA workers will shortly be analyzed to determine how many of them actually need the work.

Poor Lighting Makes Hard Reading

YOU may not realize it, but reading a newspaper in poor light is a hard visual task. The combination of small type on newsprint makes for poor visibility. Good lighting can greatly improve this. For scientists say that good light "magnifies" newspaper type . . . makes it easy to read . . . by increasing the visibility of the black type and the gray-white paper.

You'll enjoy your newspaper more with good lighting. To reduce otherwise annoying contrasts be sure to have other lights burning in the room. You'll also save yourself possible eyestrain, headaches, and fatigue by reading only in good light. Try putting a 75 or a 100-watt light bulb in your favorite reading lamp tonight. See what a difference it makes!
