

Agronomist Explains Value, Use of Lime

Lime is being distributed throughout North Carolina under the grant of aid program of the Triple-A, and to acquaint farmers with the value and use of the soil tonic, E. C. Blair, agronomist of the State college extension service, has compiled a list of suggestions.

In the first place, he points out that agricultural lime (ground limestone) stimulates better growth of legumes, which, when turned under, increase the yield of other crops. The amount of lime to apply per acre depends on the crop to be grown, and the degree of acidity of the soil.

Alfalfa requires a comparatively neutral soil, red clover and sweet clover a soil that is slightly acid, while lespedeza, soybeans and cowpeas will do just as well on a moderately acid soil as on a neutral soil. Very few Piedmont and Mountain soils need lime for such crops as corn, wheat, oats, cotton, and tobacco.

On most soils in the Piedmont and Mountain sections the following amounts of lime per acre are recommended: For alfalfa, 4,000 to 6,000 pounds; for red clover and sweet clover, 1,200 to 2,000 pounds; for lespedeza, soybeans and cowpeas, 1,000 to 1,500 pounds; and for pastures, 1,000 to 2,000 pounds.

The best time to apply lime is from three months to a year before planting the legume crop for which it is intended. For instance, apply lime to small grain in the fall and sow clover or lespedeza the following spring. There is little good in applying lime to a crop already growing.

Lime should be applied after plowing and mixed with the topsoil by harrowing, Blair continued. Do not apply lime and plow it in, as it leaches out through the subsoil fast enough without such encouragement, he continued.

The Mt. Vernon 4-H Club of Rutherford county will take an old tenant house and make it into an attractive home as a major project for the whole club this year.
