LITTLE THEATRE TO PRESENT "DULCY" AS FIRST PLAY

The recently organized Highlands Little Theatre will present its first play, "Dulcy," by George F. Kauffman and Marc Connelly, Tuesday night, August 29th, at the School Theatre, with the following cast of characters:

Anne Altstaetter, Frank Lowman, Tony Moore, Jack H. Wilcox, Tom Fitz-Patrick, Polly Raoul, Margaret Rankin, Edgar Neely, Jr., Herbert C. Milkey, Sarah Bridges Thompson, and Henry Zoellner.

The cast is made up of people who have had considerable stage experience, and of others who are appearing on the stage for the first time. The Little Theatre group, which hopes to include others not already aligned with it, is anxious to promote enough interest and enthusiasm this summer to carry over for a full season next year, with production at regular intervals.

"Dulcy" is a light comedy, the story of a young wife who insists on carrying out her well-meaning but flighty, and often disastrous, notions of helping her husband in business. The play is directed by Tom Fitz-Patrick, associate professor of architecture, Clemson college, who is a charter member and director of the Clemson Little Theatre.

Tickets have been on general sale for the past week, and will be on sale at Anderson's Drug Store from Friday through Monday. Reserved seats are 50 cents and general admission 35 cents.

Through the courtesy of Mr. O. F. Summer, the Little Theatre has been allowed to hold rehearsals in the school theatre, and to rent the theatre for the night of its performance.
