BIBLE THOUGHT

... And the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations.
—Revelations 22:2.

And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me.
—Jesus of Nazareth.

The Red Cross

HAVE you ever stopped to think of the meaning of the Red Cross symbol?

As memberships are renewed this year it is well that we be mindful of all for which this banner stands.

Since the early days of the Church the color red has symbolized the blood of the martyrs. The choice of this insignia by the founders of the international Red Cross was guided by its purpose of healing through sacrifice. Under the Red Cross there has marched an ever-mobilized army willing to sacrifice strength and life for "the healing of the nations". Under this flag goes the ministry of healing from those nations who still honor the cross of Christ.

There are governments in the world today that have trampled underfoot the cross and all for which it stands. Many in these lands who are suffering martyrdom today are looking to us for help. Wherever we send the Red Cross, healing and hope go with it.

This year should witness the greatest outpouring of memberships in history. For the worldwide ministry of the American Red Cross is needed as never before.

So long as the people of the United States uphold in their hearts and with their gifts the banner of the Red Cross, there need be no fear of a Red revolution.

Book Week

THIS good land of ours is developing a civic calendar that bids fair to keep us on our toes keeping up with it. The days and weeks set apart to remember and to celebrate in a special way those many things worth celebrating and remembering are being observed to good account.

Which is by way of preface to our readers that this is "Book Week" throughout the nation. In this day of movies and radios and newspapers; bridge and golf and football games and just plain working-for-a-living, Book Week reminds us that there is still a magic land of books. It would be good for all to keep this week in whatever way their souls desire.

"Real recreation is diversification of occupation" says one of the writers of the classics that nobody reads these days. An exciting experience awaiting the most prosaic is that excursion into another world by way of a book.

If you have not visited your public library here in Franklin lately, you will be amply repaid if you decide to celebrate Book Week by a visit. You will be delighted to see the new stacks with hundreds of new books—of fiction, travel, history, philosophy, nature study—many of the new books that everyone should read if they want "to keep up with the times". There is a fascinating array of books for children and young people too.

The love of books is something that grows with indulgence; many have acquired a liberal education without schooling, while none can be educated without the thoughtful reading of good books.

Dr. Durant's Address

A NOTEWORTHY address was made in Asheville Monday evening by Will Durant, noted author and philosopher.

Considering the threat to our political foundations, Mr. Durant said, "Half the world is hovering between communism and fascism and democracy is hanging in the balance. We are faced with a challenge and we need statesmanship."

Saying that politicians are too busy thinking of re-election to consider long-time problems, he suggested a national advisory council to study problems of our civilization and report findings to Congress; and as a remedy to overcome present destructive tendencies, he made suggestions, including:

Schools of government in every American college as rigorous in their requirements as our schools of medicine; a U. S. Civic Academy patterned after West Point and Annapolis to train men and women in the art and science of public administration. "Politics may then become a profession instead of a racket."

Civilian Conservation Corps made permanent and universal, when every American youth will give one year of his life to learning to live with others and with nature.

Teaching of the moral code from kindergarten through college, and the teaching of character by teachers of character.

The encouraging of marriage and child-bearing by those best fitted to reproduce, with economic barriers to marriage removed through certain reforms.

To better our economic status by profit-sharing and spreading the proceeds of industry through mass consumption.

The church, the schools and the family were pointed out as the basic methods to strengthen relations of mankind. Today, he said the family has decreased in size, weakening the forces that tend to develop individuals; while schools are building intellect instead of character. The average college student today is prepared to sit in judgment on our moral code and cast it aside.

"Can civilization stand this?"
"When religion breaks down, the moral code it supported breaks down."
