

W. N. C. Farm Meeting Scheduled August 20-21

Mountain farmers will hold their fourth annual Western North Carolina Farmers' Convention at Appalachian State Teachers college, Boone, on August 20 and 21. About 500 are expected to attend, with the majority being cooperators in the TVA-Extension Demonstration Farm Program. However, all farmers are invited.

Fred S. Sloan of Franklin, Western district farm agent, is in charge of arrangements. He announced that the convention will formally open at 1 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, August 20, and will close with a morning session on Wednesday, August 21. Several groups of farmers plan to arrive in Boone on Monday evening and spend Tuesday morning touring Watauga county farms.

Arrangements have been made with the college for the delegates to receive four meals and one night's lodging for $1.75. For those who arrive Monday and spend two nights and eat six meals, the cost will be $2.50. The farmers must bring their own bed linen.

For the most part the meeting will consist of discussions, with the delegates being divided into subject matter groups according to their interests. Only four talks are scheduled for the first day, and one for the final session Wednesday morning.

Dr. B. B. Dougherty, president, will welcome the group to Appalachian State College, and R. W. Shoffner, extension farm management economist, will discuss the demonstration farm program which he directs. J. C. McAmis or W. M. Landess of the agricultural relations division of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and Frank H. Jeter, agricultural editor of State college, will be the other speakers Tuesday.

Dean I. O. Schaub of State college, director of the N. C. extension service, will sum up the meeting before adjournment at noon on Wednesday.
