Gardening Becomes Year-Round Project

No longer is gardening considered exclusively a summer enterprise. H. R. Niswonger, horticulturist of the N. C. State college extension service, points out that it is possible to have fresh vegetables from the home garden on a year-round basis in North Carolina.

"During September and October, there are many vegetables which may be planted," Niswonger says. "These include winter spinach of the Longstanding and Bloomsdale varieties, Siberian kale, Southern Giant Curled mustard, Purple Top Globe turnips, and Seven Top turnip greens.

The horticulturist also recommends green onions as a winter delicacy from the home garden. "Put out sets of the Silver Skin variety, and for green onions for next winter and spring set out the multiplying variety. After thinning out plants to be used for green onions, the remaining plants will develop into mature onions," he says.

EXPLOSION KILLS 50

Good Vision Vital To Child Welfare

Educators in the United States are paying increasing attention to the visual equipment of children, for studies have demonstrated repeatedly that visual defects not only retard the acquisition of knowledge, but they may breed undesirable social qualities, according to M. J. Julian, president of the Better Vision Institute.

"Extensive studies have shown that two important factors are involved in defective vision—(1) the physical and (2) the mental. A child who cannot see well cannot read and carry on his tasks easily at school. Correcting such defects naturally facilitates education of children. However," says Mr. Julian, "the eyes have an important effect upon the nervous system and the mental states of the child. Headaches and nervous irritability are caused by defective eyes. Frequently undesirable social habits, including juvenile delinquency, can be traced to uncorrected visual defects. Poor eyes definitely tend to make "difficult children" out of some youngsters. Several authorities go so far as to say that failure to correct visual defects in children is an important factor in truancy. One calls attention to the fact that a substantial part of the inmates of reform schools have defective vision. He points out that a child who

Macon, Swain Singing Conventions Will Hold Joint Meet This Month

Macon and Swain county singing conventions will hold a combined meeting at High Lonesome, near the shallow ford on the Macon-Swain county line, on the fourth Sunday of this month, Theron A. Annual Wilkes Reunion On Iotla Sunday

All relatives and friends of the Wilkes family are cordially invited to be present at the annual family reunion, to be held this year at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Horace Morgan on Iotla this Sunday, September 15. An old-fashioned picnic dinner will be an integral part of the celebration, and every family is asked to bring a well-filled basket.

Two More Macon Boys Join U. S. Navy

Two more Macon county boys have offered their services to Uncle Sam's armed forces. They are Henry Hylton and Frank Leach, Jr., of Franklin who were recently accepted by the Naval recruiting station in Asheville and sent to Norfolk, Va.

cannot see well finds it difficult to adjust himself with others and frequently becomes a rebellious child. "Eyesight surveys have indicated that about 20 out of every 100 school children in the United States have visual defects, many of which are uncorrected. Thus it would appear that the visual welfare of children is one of the outstanding problems of American education today."
