State College Answers Timely Farm Questions

Q. When cows and calves gnaw at fence posts and rails, what is the reason?
A. This is a sign of mineral deficiency in the ration. A sufficient quantity of calcium is usually contained in legume hays such as cowpea, soybean, clover and alfalfa if these crops are grown on soil not deficient in lime. Where the grain ration contains 30 per cent of wheat bran, cottonseed meal and soybean meal, there is usually a sufficient amount of phosphorous. However, it will do no harm to allow the cows and calves free access to a mineral mixture composed of one part salt and four parts of steamed bone meal.

Q. How can corn weevils be controlled?
A. The first step, says J. O. Rowell, extension entomologist, is to thoroughly clean the storage bin or crib and treat the wood-work with any odorless, tasteless, water-white petroleum similar to that used in commercial fly sprays. Accumulations of old grain and counties designated as "modified accredited bang's disease-free areas" are: Burke, Cherokee, Clay, Macon, and McDowell.

"All the dairy and breeding cattle over six months of age in the 'accredited areas' have been tested under the bang's control program," Dr. William Moore, chief of the department's veterinary division, explained.

The cattle in counties receiving this distinction must have not more than one per cent bang's infection and herd infection not to exceed five per cent.

All herds of cattle in which bang's disease is known to exist have been quarantined. Accredited counties receive a further protection under the law which enables the department to prevent the shipment or movement of cattle into an accredited area without first having been tested."

Dr. Moore said that "with nearly half of North Carolina's counties on the honor roll as bang's free areas, a distinct contribution has been made looking toward the building and protection of the state's great cattle industry."

The bang's disease control and eradication program is a project conducted in cooperation with the United States bureau of animal industry before bang's testing work can be inaugurated in any county, the board of commissioners enters into an agreement to cooperate in the disease-eradication work.

Diseased animals are slaughtered and their owners are paid indemnities not to exceed $50 for pure bred stock and $25 for grade animals. Money to pay for slaughtered stock is furnished on a 50-50 basis by the state and federal governments.
