FELLING OAK RECALLS PAST Ice Horseshoe Discovered

In Ancient Tree On Shortoff

By MRS. H. G. STORY

An old oak tree, thought to be endangering property in the front yard of the James R. Wright home on Shortoff, near Highlands, which had stood for almost a century and had shaded the lawn of the Wright family for 60 years, was cut down a few days ago, Mr. Wright decided to help the boys saw it into firewood lengths, and in doing so found an ice horseshoe imbedded in the tree to a lepth of four or more inches. Mrs. L. M. Leas, in accounting for the horseshoe, said it was nailed to the tree by her father, the late Marion Wright, for a "hitching post" 60 vears ago.

Only a few of the older generation, remember the ice shoes worn by horses here in pioneer days, as horses were few and far between and ox-teams were the order of the day. The ice shoes were put on over the regular horseshoes with iron bolts and were studded with corks, making a dependable ure the family had in coming to church on Sunday mornings over deep snows in sleds drawn by

Mrs. Leas' grandfather, James Wright, settled in the Shortoff section in 1865, and the ice horseshoe found in the tree was one of a number bought by him from Charles Hutchinson shortly after the latter's arrival here in 1872 in company with S. T. Kelsey, who later founded the town of High-ed to the gate post at the quaint old Wright home in the shadow of Shortoff mountain, as a link between the old days of the horseand-saddle mode of mountain travel and the present high-powered automobile days.
