Glenville Power House

This red brick, steel and concrete structure of modern architectural design, set in solid rock, is 56 by 112 feet in plan and 101 feet high from foundation to parapet. It houses the generating unit and its valves. The control room is two stories underground. This hydro-electric power unit of the Nantahala Power and Light company is located on the west fork of the Tuckasee river in Jackson County.

Glenville Power Plant Dedicated By Governor

Distinguished Guests And Large Assembly Attend

A day of sunshine and autumn colors in the mountains greeted visitors from far and near who came to the dedication of the Nantahala Power and Light company's Glenville project in Jackson county last Monday.

The day was one to be long remembered by all who shared in the impressive ceremonies which marked the completion of a great feat in hydro-electric engineering. The entire staff of the company's headquarters in Franklin, who have labored untiringly for the past year on every phase of this project, and the Morrison-Knudsen company, contractors, experienced the reward that comes in successful accomplishment.

No detail was omitted in the careful preparations made in honor of the occasion and for the comfort and pleasure of the guests who attended.

J. E. S. Thorpe, president, and Mrs. Thorpe welcomed the guests who assembled at High Hampton Inn, where luncheon was served in the forenoon. At 1:15 p. m. a notable gathering of over 500 people assembled on the landscaped grounds of the power plant—a stately building in a rare setting of surrounding hills. The speakers' stand, decorated with flags and seats for the large assemblage had been provided.

New Plant Dedicated
Governor Broughton delivered the address in which he dedicated this new unit of western North Carolina's electric power to the service of the people "in war and peace." At the conclusion of his speech there was a dramatic moment when the state's chief executive pressed a button that set in motion the 22,500 kilowatt generators, the assembled audience hearing the roar of the mighty machinery as power began to flow over the Great Smoky mountains on transmission lines for a distance of 86 miles to the aluminum plant at Alcoa, Tenn. This huge rolling mill, 55 acres in extent, is turning out aluminum for National Defense.

Governor's Speech
The governor paid tribute to the people who lived in the vicinity who had worked on this huge project, stating that the company's contract stipulated that local labor be employed, commenting that no finer labor could be found in the world than in the hills of North Carolina. He recalled that this state is one of the greatest water power areas in all the earth, already ranking third in the United States, next to New York and California.

A state balanced in agriculture and industry, the governor stated that its financial soundness and forces of social progress in roads, schools and welfare programs, combined with high spiritual ideals, were operating to make the state "a better place in which to live."

Referring to the fateful hour in which we are living, the governor said he believed that two things would decide the outcome of the war, food and power, and that we have the resources to furnish both.

Mr. Thorpe, who was master of ceremonies, called on the Rev. Mr. Elliott of the faculty of Western Carolina Teacher's college to open the services with prayer. In a brief address he outlined the progress of the undertaking to completion paying tribute to contractors, engineers and field organization.

Mr. Thorpe Welcomes Guests

Welcoming the gathering on behalf of the people of western North Carolina, President Thorpe dedicated the plant for National Defense, citing that Glenville represented the first completed power plant since President Roosevelt called for all-out defense. He then introduced D. Hiden Ramsey, editor of the Asheville Citizen, who in turn, introduced the governor.

Other Speakers

S. K. Colby of Pittsburgh, vice-president of the Aluminum company of America, spoke briefly, with witty comment. He touched lightly upon the current legal difficulties between his company and the government, then seriously of the united effort for national defense. This new power released was referred to as meaning 400

U. S. Naval Vessel Destroys German Post In Greenland

Expedition's Members On Way To Boston Under Guard

A report stating that a "German sponsored expedition" of about 20 persons and a small Norwegian steamer were seized off the coast of Greenland by a U. S. navy vessel, and at the same time radio equipment and other supplies were "disposed of" has been released by the U. S. navy department.

Well informed sources feel that the expedition had as its purpose the establishment on America protected Greenland of a radio station for dispatch of weather and other information of military importance.

The captured ship is reported to be en route to this country along with the imprisoned members of the crew.

Navy's Account

The Navy's account of the incident is as follows:

"While on its regular patrol in Greenland waters during September a United States Naval vessel encountered and inspected a small Norwegian steamer of about 60 tons."

"Examination of the personnel on board revealed that the vessel and her company of about 20 had been dispatched to Greenland under the auspices of the Nazi authorities in Norway to establish a radio station from which were to be sent to the German authorities weather reports and other military information."

Aerial Activity In This Section Expected Around Oct. 20

Plans have been completed and Macon county is ready to play her part when called upon in the military games taking place in Western North and South Carolina.

Under the leadership of C. Tom Bryson, who was assisted by Gilmer A. Jones, commander of the local American Legion post, and G. L. Houk, county defense chairman, an air raid warning system has been set up here composed of twelve posts and utilizing the services of between 180 and 200 men.

Each lookout post will have one chief observer in charge who will be aided by one or more assistant chief observers and several observers.

Each post will have contact with a direct telephone connection to Charlotte, military headquarters for this area. Upon sighting of planes the observer is instructed to call Charlotte, and give number, location, type of planes and direction of travel. The area is divided into zones and observers have been given a code which simplifies the sending of the message.

The posts are established so as to give a complete coverage of the county, and a telephone is located within 30 seconds reach of each post.
