Cooperation

Of Church and State Need Of Democracy

Consideration for others, cooperation of the church and the state, and building life on eternal values were among the points discussed by the Rev. J. S. Higgins, pastor of the Methodist church, in his sermon to the graduating class at the Highlands school auditorium Sunday morning. Mr. Higgins used as his text the sixteenth verse of the tenth chapter of John, "There shall be one fold and one shepherd." He spoke of the crying need of unity in the world today and said "to have this unity in the fold there must be consideration for others, and that in the union of the fold there is a decided value upon every human being; that we too often think of our community as being a very small unit of the fold, but that every unit, no matter how small, has its influence upon the sum of the world's outcome."

Mr. Higgins said that the great factor we need to remember between totalitarianism and democracy and cooperation with the Christian church is the word freedom, and that in the time of crises there is a tendency to close out freedom of speech; that in order to have unity there must be greater cooperation between the church and the state and that "freedom" is the keynote to this end, which rightly used, produces the desired results. He said however, that the results of freedom when misused or misdirected or used as a license to indulge, are called sin, and that we must change our opinion in regard to the statement that "individuals sin and nation can only make mistakes," citing the old Testament teaching that sin may rest upon one or many individuals and noting that Israel is the one exhorted to return unto the Lord that she might be saved.

Three years ago the North Carolina beer industry launched its own "Clean Up or Close Up" drive, to help preserve beer's important benefits to the state.

Today, on its third anniversary, this Committee has proved that Self-Regulation really works! 205 retail beer outlets—only a handful out of the thousands of wholesome, law-abiding places inspected—failed to clean up after our warning. They were closed up!

The beer industry, which works with your law officers through this Committee, here renounces its pledge to keep the retail sale of beer up to North Carolina's high standards.
