On The Tar Heel Front In Washington

By Robert A. Erwin and Frances McKusick

WASHINGTON.—Representative Zebulon Weaver, of Asheville, has taken issue again with Ralph K. Davies, Deputy Petroleum Coordinator, over the rationing of gasoline in the North Carolina section of the Great Smoky Mountain National Park, a condition that exists while the Tennessee park area remains free from rationing. Mr. Davies thus far has refused to do anything about the situation.

In a follow-up letter to Mr. Davies requesting another conference on the subject, Congressman Weaver pointed out that East Tennessee gets some of its petroleum supplies by the Plantation Pipeline as well as by overland transportation rather than pipeline.

"My information is that Western North Carolina, including the counties in the western part of the State from Asheville to Murphy, have ample resources from which supplies may be had, if permitted to use them," Mr. Weaver said.

"Your letter in no particular reaches the specific matter which I undertook to bring to your attention. As I pointed out in my letter to Secretary Ickes, to which you reply, as an illustration, the Great Smoky Mountains National Park is situated one half in North Carolina and one half within Tennessee. The Tennessee side of the park can now secure an unlimited supply, while on the North Carolina side we are denied this privilege. Such places as Waynesville, Sylva, Cherokee, Bryson City and Murphy, which are contiguous to the park, and to Tennessee, are in a very desperate situation.

"Naturally, Western North Carolina has looked forward to the benefits to be obtained from the National Park. Under the present setup, these benefits are now entirely turned over to East Tennessee. The towns which I have mentioned and others are as great a distance from the Atlantic Coast as Knoxville and East Tennessee towns. In fact, Murphy and some others are further west than Knoxville. They can obtain ample supplies of gas without resorting to deliveries from the terminal of the Plantation Pipeline at Greensboro, North Carolina. . . . I would be glad to have a further conference with you about it as the situation is one which demands further consideration. * * *
