Cows Will Do Patriotic Duty Only If Kept Warm

There is an acute shortage of milk in North Carolina, and it is estimated that Army camps alone will need 11,755 gallons more milk daily than Tar Heel dairymen can produce during the next six montths.

John A. Arey, Extension dairy specialist of N. C. State College, says that the cows on North Carolina farms will help make up this shortage if they are given better care this winter. "Comfortable quarters for the dairy herd will pay off at the milk pail," he declared.

The livestock leader says that no manner of good feeding can make up for the lack of proper housing and care of the dairy herd in winter. Cows that are allowed to stand in muddy yards on cold rainy days will not produce well regardless of how ample the feed may be.

"It is a poor practice," says Arey, "to house the dairy herd in buildings that have so many cracks and openings that the cold wind comes in without resistance. It requires much of the feed consumed to keep cows warm under such conditions. The feed used for fael cannot be used to produce milk. In addition to warm housing, an abundance of absorbent bedding will add materially to the comfort and cleardiness of the cows."

The Extension worker also urged that dairy cows be grazed on small grain in winter. "In many cases," he said, "cereal crops such of the Cabbage Patch" will not only attract record andiences of regular movie goers, but those of the older generation who enjoyed this inimitable romance of the slums when it was a "best seller", will turn out in full force. For this is one of those rare pictures which must not be missed by grown-ups or children, filled with laughing humor and a happy philosophy which turns adversi-tics into blessings. Paramount has here produced a masterpiece out of alice Hegan Rice's immortal tale.

produce just as much seed after being grazed, within reason, as when not grazed. In addition, it is profitable to set aside a part of some of these crops for complete grazing." Arey also emphasized the feeding of an abundance of hay and silage. "We usually find, other conditions being equal, that the best level of milk production is in those herds where the cows have free access to racks kept well filled with hay," he stated.

Blue Ridge Breezes By A. Mountaineer

Highlands, N. C .- In this wonderland of lofty mountains, musical streams, and cozy valleys, one finds the descendants of a race of rugged, strong-hearted, hospitable son City and his grandmother, folk, who were un-surpassed in Mrs. W. R. Pressley, of Franklin, these qualities by any other race during the holidays. He has re-of people in the whole world. And turned to Norfolk, Va. it is most gratifying to observe that this younger generation has richly inherited these attributes, insomuch that even the children in many instances show the same pluck and determination which characterized the hardy poincers and first blazed the trails into this rock-ribbed wilderness.

ole timers learned to depend on therselves, an to he'p one another. Yaller Jackets don't stick tighter no samer than mountain folks in time of need or trouble. An they'uns wuz that tickled to see strangers from outside that they'd do ther best to make 'em feel at home. Hard livin an all that goes into hit makes some of our mountain fellars act sometimes like they's hard-boiled; but in most cases the men and wimen too air soft-natered an gentle-hearted like the April showers that start the grass to growing and the buds to swellin in the spring-o-the-year."

A most interesting modern version of the foregoing is exemplified in the lives of forest ranger John Edwards, his wife, and their two children, who will be at home from now until next June in the one-roomed look-out station main-tained by the U. S. forestry service on top of Mt. Satulah,

At an elevation of 4,550 feet, these young folk will live the highest, literally speaking, of any of their neighbors. And it is a privi-lege to note that their ideals of living are correspondingly high and noble. Moreover, one could not find in a mansion a finer spirit of genuine friendliness and hospitality than that which prevades the atmosphere in and around this tiny abode up there on top of the world

The children, John Benjamin, age six, and Virginia Dale, age four, are clear-eyed, healthy specimens like their parents. Happy them, to breathe the clean, crisp air of such an altitude, and to bask in the un-filtered sunshine, whose morning rays visit first the mountain-tops, and whose evening rays linger to kiss the peaks good-bye after the lower slopes have been wrapped in twilight, and the valleys covered with the mantle of
