Truck Owners May Apply For Extra Mileage

Owners of commercial vehicles need not obtain legal assistance when applying for additional mileage allowances. Robert G. Carter, district manager of ODT's Division of Motor Transport, has announced.

"If an operator needs extra mileage for his necessary operations, he can get it without legal assistance," the district manager declared. "This is not to say that employment of an attorney, is prejudicial to any case; but those who cannot afford attorney's fees will receive the same consideration if they file their appeals personally."

The district manager's statement was prompted by receipt of many appeals filed by attorneys, and others containing notarized statements.

"It is not the intention of the Office of Defense Transportation to require anyone to incur any expense in filing his appeal," he said. "Each appeal is handled on its merits, whether filed by the owner or through his agent. In each case, there must be an operating record for the past 30 days."

"Mileage restrictions imposed by Certificates of War Necessity are designed to save rubber and equipment without interfering with necessary operations," the ODT official declared.

Farming 'On The Level' Ups War Crop Yields

That broad grin is typical of farmers of North Carolina and other states of the nation who are finding that contour farming — level around the slope—holds soil, moisture, and fertilizer on the land. In addition to increasing per acre yields of Food for Freedom, contour farming saves fuel, horsepower, and machinery wear, says Earl B. Garrett, state conservationist of the U.S. Soil Conservation Service and a member of the State USDA War Board. "When fields are farmed on the contour, all the pulling is on the level and the extra fuel needed for uphill pulls is saved," he says. America's record crops of last year are attributed more to increased per acre yields than to additional acres under the plow. Conservation measures carried out during the past ten years have done much to increase per acre yields in North Carolina, Garrett says, and contour farming is one of the modern conservation measures which will help farmers meet their production goals this year.

Better Fire Protection Needed For Farm Forests

The first need of farm forestry in North Carolina right now is more efficient fire control and a realization on the part of every one just how much damage can result from a wood's fire, says regional Farm Forester H. E. Blanchard of the North Carolina State College Extension Service. The recent Legislature recognized the seriousness of the situation when it voted to make it a felony to maliciously set a fire in the woods.

Blanchard cites a case where fire got into a growth of timber that was on land that had not been burned over for 35 years. He reports, that not more than fifty percent of the saw timber will survive the fire and that only about 10 percent of the young growth is left.

In another case, the land had not been burned over in 22 years. The timber was cut on a selective basis about five years ago and was well stocked with production trees at the time of the fire. These reproduction trees are now practically all killed and must be salvaged for pulpwood. At the time of his report, it was too early to tell just how much damage had been done to the sawtimber, but the damage was great, he said.

On account of the large losses experienced, the farmers owning the woodlands declared that they were going to burn off their woods in the future to avoid any repetition of such a hot fire. However, the forester called their attention to the fact that repeated fires in the woods will kill out all the young growth, seriously damage the larger timber, and experience proves that yearly burning is poor policy. Better fire protection is the answer.
