To Buy ELECTRIC POWER

THAT'S TRUE, even though the electric light and power industry in America was called on to produce, in 1942, the greatest amount of electric power in history—189 billion kilowatt-hours!

And at the same time the average cost per kilowatt-hour to the consumer was lower than ever before!

Not only were all the demands of war plants, military camps, naval stations, and arsenals met—but there remained 27 billion kilowatt-hours of electrical energy to take care of the needs of shops and stores, 30 billion for homes, 13 billion for public transportation, street lighting, and other uses.

These are some of the accomplishments of the electric light and power industry and of the electrical manufacturers who build the equipment used to generate, distribute and utilize electricity—working together with the teamwork so typically American.

How We Helped

POWER GENERATION. More than one half of all the electric power generated by electric light and power companies in the U. S. is produced by generators manufactured by General Electric.

And such has been the improvement in the efficiencies of turbine-driven generators that if the electric power used in 1942 had been produced with the machines of 1924, it would have required more than a million extra cars of coal and one hundred and forty thousand men just to mine and haul this extra coal.

POWER DISTRIBUTION. To have ample power available wherever new war plants have sprung up requires large and highly efficient transforming and switching equipment and the solution of highly intricate engineering problems. General Electric has had a hand, and a head, in the development and manufacture of much of this equipment.

POWER UTILIZATION. Building machines, lamps, and appliances that put electricity to work more efficiently in factories and homes is one of our most important jobs. The United States has more of these electrical helpers than any other nation. In 1942, the average home used twice as much electricity as in 1930, and in those 12 years the average price per kilowatt-hour decreased 40%.

This is only a small part of the story of America's electrical industry. When the full story becomes history with the passing of the years, it will reveal a group of men who, with a determination which now seems providential, kept on—co-operatively developing new and better equipment, increasing generating capacity, lowering costs, expanding service, planning always to be ready for the demands of the future. It will be a story of remarkable vision and courage—for it all had to be planned, and the work started, years ahead of the need.

The next time you meet a man from your electric service company, be he the local manager, or meter reader, or spurred lineman carrying out his assignment in rain, sleet, or heavy winds, give him a word of encouragement—for he is the man who is making it unnecessary for you to stand in line for electric power. General Electric Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

Salt Preserving Food Saving Plan

A mimeographed publication, giving the latest information on the brining and salting of vegetables for home use has been issued by the agricultural extension service at N. C. State college. Editor Frank H. Jeter announced recently. He said that this publication gives late information about a valuable supplement to other methods of food preservation in these days when families should conserve all the surplus fruits and vegetables possible.

Those wishing information on the salt method of preserving vegetables should write the Agricultural Editor, N. C. State college, Raleigh, for a free copy of "Preservation of Vegetables by Salting and Brining."

Feed Wheat

The Commodity Credit Corporation has discontinued sale of feed wheat except for a small quantity to be used in the flood area and in deficit feed areas along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

Dehydrating Fruits And Vegetables In The Home

A new circular containing instructions for dehydrating vegetables and fruits in the home, together with plans for building a dehydrator, was announced here today by Editor Frank H. Jeter of the N. C. State college extension service.

The publication carries a list of the vegetables and fruits best suited for dehydration, describes the stage of maturity at which they should be gathered, and gives the methods to be followed in their preparation. Treatment before dehydration, tray loading, average time of drying, characteristics of the dehydrated products, and methods of refreshing are also described.

A free copy of Extension Circular No. 266, entitled "How To Dehydrate Food at Home" may be obtained by writing the Agricultural Editor, N. C. State college, Raleigh.
