In his brief span he offered and gave his all. His parents and little brothers have the sympathy of all who sorrow with them in their loss.

Woodrow Wilson's Birthday

WOODROW Wilson's birthday on December 28 brings to mind at this time those eternal principles which he set forth as a pattern for all peoples during World War I.

To mark this anniversary, the Woodrow Wilson Foundation has conferred its annual award upon General Jan Christian Smuts, the former President's intimate friend and the only surviving statesman of the Paris Peace Conference following the last war. Now 73 years old, the General is Prime Minister of the British South African Union, Minister of Defense and Commander-in-Chief of the South African Command, and one of the world's greatest statesmen.

The Foundation was organized to keep alive and emphasize those principals for which President Wilson fought and died.

An editorial on the Charlotte Observer recalls that "human society is returning now to precisely the same ideals and ideas which President Wilson proclaimed and for the realization of which he died a martyr's death." We quote below a few paragraphs from the editorial

In a generous sense, too, the world is witnessing a vin demon of his idealism then, no matter how ruthlessly it was repudiated even by his own fellowcountrymen and spurned by the political minds of Europe.

His prophecies are being fulfilled, the path along which he pioneered is again flooded with the light of reason and hope for the human race, and the implements by means of which the world may expect to survive the recurring catastrophes of war which he framed and fashioned are again being devised for the future of society.

Not only the memory, but the daring statesmanship of Woodrow Wilson is endowed with the germ its own deathlessness.

There is such a thing as an unconscious immortally or conserved energy that defies the terror of death beelf. It survives all the mutations of time. It resonably is projected unhalted and unhampered into the generations of the ages.
