

State Collgee Hints To Farm Homemakers

By Ruth Current N. C. State College Taking care of a man's suit makes sense any time, but this fall brings special reasons for care of suits, new and old, say clothing specialists.

Hang coats squarley on broad wooden hangers of the wish-bone shape made for men's suits. When a coat must hang on a chair, take time to pull shoulders into shape over chair corners.

Best way to hang trousers is upside down, using a hanger with clips. If trousers must be laid over the crossbar of a wire hanger, fasten cardboard, or thick paper over the cross bar, to prevent a sharp crease.

Trousers finished about one-half inch above the heels look and wear best at the lower edge. A strip of cloth or tape sewed just inside the edge takes the brunt of wear off the trouser cuff.

Orchard Grass And Bluegrass Suggested

Where conditions are suitable for the growth of orchard grass and Kentucky bluegrass, they are recommended as superior to redtop for pasture production, says the sixty-seventh annual report of the Agricultural Experiment Station at State College, just released by Director L. D. Bayer.

In a test in Haywood county, for example, 5 pounds of each of the three grasses were seeded together with a mixture of white clover and lespedeza in 1940. Redtop was able to survive in competition with the more desirable grasses on the unfertilized soil where none of them made much growth.

When placed on a fertilized soil, where a satisfactory growth of orchard and bluegrass could be produced, redtop could not survive the competition.

The report says that this test shows "the lack of response to treatment that can be expected from redtop and points to the desirability of seeding such grasses as orchard and bluegrass where conditions are made favorable for their growth."

Recommendations for the use of redtop in the pasture have been made because of the ability of the crop to survive under adverse soil conditions.

Farm Leaders Are Needed In 4-H Work

All phases of 4-H activities are showing great progress in the Wallburg community of Davidson county, and county and home agents of the State College Extension Service say that thousands of such leaders as Mrs. R. G. Lanning are needed throughout the state.

Mrs. Lanning, the mother of a home agent, has been a leader of Home Demonstration work for many years and now she is specializing in 4-H activities, helping other boys and girls do a better job.

According to Lala Blalock, assistant home agent in Davidson, Mrs. Lanning has been president of the county Home Federation Council, a representative to the State Council, and a willing neighborhood leader.

This fall she assisted with the Davidson county fair and was made director of the canning department. So good was her own personal exhibit from the 522 containers of food that she prepared for her own family, that she won first prize at the fair. Later the same exhibit was carried to the fall federation meeting at Lexington, where about 150 home demonstration club women noted her excellent standards of canning.

"Mrs. Lanning is a very responsible, dependable leader, who thoroughly enjoys her activities," says Miss Blalock. "She is one of the most outstanding home demonstration leaders that Davidson county has produced, and we need thousands more like her, both men and women, in all sections of North Carolina. Given local leadership such as that supplied by Mrs. Lanning, 4-H activities can be greatly expanded and improved. Her voluntary and unselfish leadership is a wonderful thing for the boys and girls, who will be our farm leaders of tomorrow."

How To Ventilate A Brooder House

A brooder house should be so constructed that air can be freely circulated through the house without a draft on the floor, says T. T. Brown, Extension poultry specialist at State College. There must be air inlets provided if the air is to be permitted free circulation so as to remove the fumes and excess moisture from the house. If the fumes are not removed from the house, the growth of the chicks will be stunted. If the excess moisture in the air is not drained off from the house, the floor and litter will become damp and that condition often results in outbreaks of disease, especially coccidiosis.

The shed-roof brooder house facing the south is easy to build and easy to ventilate. Brown suggests that the windows should be so installed that they will pull in at the top. Side shields should be used so that fresh air entering the house will be diverted upwards so as to prevent a cold draft from reaching the chicks on the floor. The pull-in windows with the side shields should be set low so the bottom of the window will reach within one foot of the floor. The fresh air is brought in through these pull-in windows, and air outlets should be provided above the plate, between the rafters on the front or south side. All the air inlets and outlets should be on the south side in cold weather. Windows or ventilators
