

EXPLAINS EGG BLOOD SPOTS

Dearstyne Recommends Candling At Peak Of Season

Blood spots in eggs may be expected at any time during the laying year, but eggs showing this condition are more prevalent during the season of peak production than at any other time, says Prof. Roy Dearstyne of State college.

"Such spots are the results of a rupture of a small vessel in the ovary or in the oviduct," he points out. "If it is on the yolk, it indicates a hemorrhage in the sac enclosing the yolk at the time the yolk became ripe and was released."

"This was probably brought about because the rupture did not occur along the stigma which contains no blood vessels, but at another section of the sac containing blood vessels. If the clot is in the white of the egg, it is the result of a rupture of a blood vessel in the oviduct which secretes the albumin of the egg."

Eggs with blood spots are not unhealthy for human consumption, nor do they indicate a diseased condition of the laying bird. They are, however, very objectionable to the purchaser of the egg, and may react against consumer demand for eggs. Because of this, it is very desirable that producers candle market eggs, especially during the season of high production.

Candlers are beginning to appear on the market again and are reasonably cheap. The op-

It's the way a girl carries herself that counts most, fashion experts say. So if you want to look nifty in your clothes, give a little thought to the matter of carrying yourself well.

To begin at the bottom, say the experts, look at your feet. Do your toes point straight ahead? You should walk in a straight line and the weight of your body should fall through the ankle. If the heel in front is due to bad posture, learn to carry the body properly and this will gradually tone up the abdominal muscles. If the bulge is from eating too much, you know what to do.

Your chest should be centered over your hips. Shoulders will be right, if the rest of the body is in a reasonably plumb line. In the poised body, the head is centered over the chest, the chest over the hips, and the weight falls through the ankle joints.

Spring cleaning isn't over until you have emptied all drawers and closets and cleaned them thoroughly; hung clothes in the fresh air and bright sunshine and brushed them well, looking along seams and under collars for signs of moths.

eration of candling is not difficult and, with some practice, the producer can readily detect blood spots or other internal abnormalities, Dearstyne says. As the industry develops, the demand that candling be done on market eggs will increase, and eventually producers will have to come to this as a routine part of their work.

State College Answers Timely Farm Questions

Q. How can I keep my Leghorns from laying tinted eggs?

A. Shell color runs in families, according to Prof. Roy Dearstyne, head of the poultry department at State college. He suggests that this trouble can be removed by breeding. One Leghorn hen in the college breeding flock has eight out of 12 daughters laying tinted eggs. Other families show no tinted eggs.

Q. How is the best way to sell my lambs and wool?

A. Cooperative lamb sales and wool pools are now being held at various points in North Carolina, according to Hazel

"Dirt and grease, moths increase." Dry cleaning and laundering will kill moths; so be sure everything is clean before you store it.

Don't stop at one moth hunt. Examine and air clothes at least once a month, clothing specialists recommend. Regular care saves worry.

It pays the homemaker to get her family up 15 minutes earlier in the morning in order to avoid petty annoyances and upset feelings that often cause that breakfast-time rush and confusion.
