Normandie Is Now Just A 'Wharf Rat'

NEW YORK.—The once proud ship, the Normandie, has become a rest camp for barnacles, and naval experts say she may never sail again.

The former luxury liner now leans sadly in her pier like a tired old lady who has lived too long, and too well, and is waiting for the angel of death to come and take her away. The

Wanted: Pied Piper To Rid N. C. Of Rats

RALEIGH.—Is there anybody in North Carolina who can blow a mean flute? Or maybe someone interested in making their first million friends, would like to go into the rat exterminating business?

Anybody, yes, North Carolina would welcome anybody who could rid the state of its overwhelming rodent population. For, according to Charles B. Woodhouse, rodent control expert of the State College Extension Service, Tar Heel rats already outnumber Tar Heel residents.

Furthermore, they caused an estimated damage of between seven and eight million dollars one-time glamor gal of the high seas, who set a North Atlantic speed record in 1935, is a bum now. The navy doesn't know what to do about her because she is a waster and eats up money like other ships eat coal.

The 38,000-ton Normandie cost the French line about $59,000,000 to build, and maintenance costs now run to about $250,000. The word around the New York waterfront is that the Normandie is strictly a jinx ship. One of the shipyard workers, who is playing nursemaid to the ailing vessel, says:

"She's a bad luck ship and it serves her right to end up broke in Brooklyn, like any other wharf rat. The first time she came into New York she tried to knock down her pier and to kill a man."

Then, as you know, four years ago she caught fire at her Hudson river pier and capsized. The Normandie has never recovered from that accident. The navy is now trying to figure out what to do with the inanimated whale that lies in its death throes at its berth: It cost more than four and a half million dollars to raise her and it is estimated that it would take at least $20,000,000 to send her back to sea.

One unsympathetic naval officer has a solution to the problem. He says: "It might be cheaper to take her out and sink her in the middle of the Atlantic."

to property, fowls and animals in the state last year. Each rat, Woodhouse says, is charged with an annual property damage of $2. For example, a resident of Goldsboro, scene of a recent rat clean-up drive, reported the loss to Rodents, of 50 broilers, weighing between two and three pounds each.

The rats are becoming bolder as time goes by, Woodhouse declares, pointing out that many have been observed in cities during daylight, probably laying plans for a potential night raid.

Meanwhile, organized rat control programs have been completed in Smithfield, Mocksville, Coolemeemee, Goldsboro and Stoneville. Other drives are scheduled for Benson and Canton as part of the extension service effort.

Woodhouse says that more than 1,200 pounds of red squill bait is used for mixing with raw fish, scrap cornmeal and oatmeal in a town the size of Mocksville. However, the newest rodenticide, 1080, while widely used, is not set in areas which can't be closed to domestic animals because of its rapid lethal action.

"The state could virtually rid itself of rats within three or four years," Woodhouse claims, "if each local community would conduct its own eradication campaign once a year."

Here's a good record: Hort Broughton of Laurel Springs, who made 10 entries in the spring Hereford show at Statesville, walked off with eight top prizes and awards for both grand champion bull and cow.

Smokey Says:

Crush out your smokes when you are in the woods. Stamp on them. Be sure they are dead. Let's be careful and protect our valuable woods.
