Finds Tomatoes Growing On His Potato Plant

When is a potato a tomato? That's what Clyde Clark, plant foreman at the Franklin Mineral Products company wanted to know when he found tomatoes growing on a potato plant in the garden at his home on the Georgia road. The potato plant, brought into The Press office by Mr. Clark, was a potato plant in every respect but one. On a single shoot that came from near the root were 11 small tomatoes; when they broken open, the tomato seeds could be seen inside. Mr. Clark had some tomato plants some distance away, he said, which evidently had been crossed with the potato.

Says Conservation Must Start With Local Government

"In the final analysis, all conservation and all utilization of natural resources takes place at the local level and experience has demonstrated that the best results can be obtained by and through the state and local governments", according to Gov. Robert S. Kerr, of Oklahoma. "The federal government renders its greatest services, serves its highest usefulness and obtains its most effective results through supporting and co-ordinating conservation by and through the state and local governments."
