OTHERS' OPINIONS

were carried out and enforced. If this was done in Germany 40 years ago, why should our beautiful Tuckasegee River be ruined today when we have every implement known to science and invention to use?

Are we going to let this practice continue when it could be averted at a very small cost to the owners of these plants? Should we allow the future of our city as the central gateway to the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, known for its thousands of natural beauties, be marred by a few selfish capitalists? Now is the time to join the movement that has been started to force these owners to do something, or shall we keep on waiting for them to fulfill their promises they have made? If we do, it will be when Gabriel blows his trumpet. Many will think that we are trying to put these well known establishments out of business, but we believe that it will be for their good, and that they will realize that they can do something with waste that they are now allowing to escape from their plants.

We have laws that forbid pollutions of streams, and no persons has the right to do anything that will pollute the water of the person adjoining him. Shall we allow the laws governing pollution to be forgotten, when our rivers are dirty, filthy, and unhealthy? Let's get together on this movement and make our town a very pretty one instead of an eyesore and a menace.—Bryson City Times.

Uses Macon Products To Build Summer Home

Atlanta Man Undismayed By Regulations And Shortages

By GUY PAUL, JR.
(Formerly of Highlands, now a journalism student at the University of North Carolina.)

In the planning and building of his summer home, which is nearing completion at White-side View, near Highlands, Ga., Harold N. Coolege, of Atlanta, Ga., has illustrated conclusively what can be accomplished in spite of the nation-wide shortage of building materials, by the use of a little imagination and the native resources and products of Macon County.

Unreconciled to the Red Tape and Anxiety of long waiting lists, Characteristic of the post-war reconversion period, and intent upon having his home ready for occupancy by next spring, Mr. Coolege forged ahead with the materials at hand and has found that expediency is not bad at all.

From the solid rock of White-side Mountain, in which it is anchored, to the peak of the vermiculite roof, the products of Macon County have been utilized to make one of the most attractive and most durable homes in this section.

The outside walls, all of the partitions and even the floors of concrete blocks, manufactured scientifically in large numbers at Franklin.

The Roof, supported by welded boiler tubes, is made of vermiculite, a product of the vermiculite deposits peculiar to the Ellijay section of Macon County. Scarce materials, such as lumber, nails, roofing and flooring, have been ruled out altogether.

Perhaps not since the Horse and buggy days, when the early settlers of Macon County pushed over the mountains and down the valleys and erected their homes out of boards hewn by their own hands, has a home been built in this area with so great a percentage of the materials coming directly out this county.

Almost all counties could do the same in the horse and buggy days, but it is unlikely that many of them can equal Macon County in this regard today.

This fact alone sets the home of Mr. Coolege off as a milestone in the annals of Macon county construction, a milestone which the people of Macon county can look to with a double sense of pride in these days of so much dilemma in the field of housing.
