State College Answers Timely Farm Questions

Q. Is DDT effective against the white peach scale?

A. No, says Dr. Clyde F. Smith, associate professor of entomology with the N. C. Agricultural experiment station, who reports that in recent tests he has conducted, a 3 per cent oil spray has been the most effective control measure. This material should be used in two applications, spaced about two weeks apart, during the latter part of November or the early part of December. Tests with DDT for the control of this pest have not been as satisfactory as with the 3 per cent oil, Dr. Smith says, but further tests are being made with it.

Q. Have North Carolina's dairy herds been able to maintain their record of freedom from Bang's disease?

A. Yes, says Dr. C. D. Grinnells, veterinarian with the N. C. Agricultural Experiment station, who gives credit for this fact to the close cooperation that has existed between cattle breeders, the veterinary division of the State Department of Agriculture, and the practicing veterinarians. He points out that in spite of the heavy traffic in dairy cattle that took place during the war years, North Carolina's dairy producers were able to maintain their position of complete freedom from Bang's disease—a position which they achieved in 1942. North Carolina has been the only state to reach this freedom.

Q. Should I dose my sheep flock with Cu-Nic this winter?

A. Yes, by all means, says the extension animal husbandry staff at State college, if you expect the presence of internal parasites in your flock. This treatment should be given about the first of December, the specialists say, and they recommend the following mixture: Dissolve one ounce of copper sulphate (blue stone) in three quarts of water, then add three-fourths of an ounce of 40 per cent solu-
