

Two Highlands Bills Killed By Committee

G. L. Houk and R. S. Jones, attorneys representing opponents of the extension bill, and a letter from Gilmer A. Jones, attorney, with reference to the map bill, pointing out that "there is a lawsuit pending on this identical question which this bill might affect".

Tuesday Mr. McGlamery made public in Raleigh a letter from J. H. Stockton, of Franklin, attorney for the Town of Highlands, with reference to the survey bill. Mr. Stockton's letter follows:

Text Of Letter

"I notice in yesterday's Asheville Citizen that the bill authorizing the recording of a map of the town of Highlands has been deferred in view of a letter from Mr. Gilmer A. Jones, attorney.

"According to the paper Mr. Jones states that there is a lawsuit pending on this identical question and that this pending lawsuit prompted someone to ask this bill be passed thereby hoping to gain an advantage.

"I do not know of any pending lawsuit regarding this map or the recording of it in any way, but there is a lawsuit pending in the superior court of Macon county in connection with an alleged trespass and encroachment on Main street in the town of Highlands, but this lawsuit will be tried and decided, in so far as the town is concerned, purely on its merits and the bill referred to was not sponsored in the hope of gaining any advantage in any respect.

"As attorney for the town of Highlands I desire to state that there is no objection to adding to this bill the following: 'Provided, this act shall not affect any pending litigation.'

"You were asked to pass this bill authorizing the recording of this map in view of preserving the original plan of the town of Highlands as laid out by its founder, the late Samuel T. Kelsey."

SAYS CONTROL OF 'BREATHING' KEEPS APPLES

Expert Tells How Fruit's Oxygen Intake May Be Reduced

If you choke apples and reduce their breathing during the winter while they are in storage, they will keep longer and much better says Assistant Professor James G. Francis of the Horticultural Department at State college.

Like human beings, apples breathe in oxygen and give off carbon dioxide. Scientific tests have shown that if the concentration of the carbon dioxide is increased and that of the oxygen decreased, the breathing process of the apple is slowed to a minimum and its storage life is greatly lengthened.

This new development in apple storage can be adapted to home use, according to Francis, by using a 50-gallon steel drum with a removable head. A hole is dug back in a bank or down into the ground, if no bank is available, and the drum placed in the hole.

This is your refrigerator, as the temperature of the soil rarely rises above 50 degrees F. Then the apples are placed in the drum and the lid replaced. Two 1/4-inch holes are drilled in the lid and with the drum full of apples and the two 1/4-inch holes in the lid, the exact desired concentrations of oxygen and carbon dioxide are maintained. There is no danger of freezing of the apples, as the heat of respiration will keep the temperature in the barrel above the freezing point.

By picking the apples while they are still quite firm and storing them at once with a minimum of bruising, the home fruit grower can keep his apples in good condition from one to two months longer than the particular variety usually keeps under home storage conditions.

Q. How can I grow fruit trees on my small garden plot?

A. The development of dwarf apple trees that never grow taller than eight feet may be the solution to your problem, says James T. Francis of the State college horticultural department. These trees can be trained on a trellis or wall with heavy pruning, and thus trained, they are both ornamental and useful. The Malling VIII and Malling IX rootstocks give the dwarfing effect.
