Grain Mill Stock Being Sold In This County

Stock in the proposed Farmers Federation feed mill at Craggy is being sold in Macon County by Harry Thomas, manager of the local Federation store, and Frank Byrd, of Bryson City, Federation western district field supervisor.

The Federation, they explained, has bought a four-acre site at Craggy for the mill, which it is estimated will cost between $250,000 and $300,000. The mill, they added, is being built with a view of giving farmers a good feed at a reasonable price. Shares, common or preferred, are $10 each. The preferred carries a guarantee of five per cent, and the common stock, available to producers only, is expected to yield six per cent. While Mr. Byrd and Mr. Thomas are contacting as many persons as possible in Macon County, they explained that stock may be obtained from any Federation employe at the Federation store in Franklin.

PLAN MEETING ON ARTIFICIAL BREEDING UNIT

Farmers Gathering Called By Mendenhall For Next Thursday

A meeting for the purpose of determining the number of farmers interested in the establishment of a livestock artificial breeding unit will be held next Thursday morning at 10 o'clock at the Agricultural building. All persons interested in this topic are asked by County Agent S. W. Mendenhall to attend the meeting.

Information will be given at this meeting concerning the value of artificial breeding, its cost to the farmer, and the type of local organization best adapted for placing this system in operation.

Mr. Mendenhall pointed out that, if an organization were formed, it could employ an inseminator and purchase semen from any available source.

He added that the American Scientific Breeding association is proposing to put in registered, proven bulls in a bull barn recently built by the Farmers Federation at Fairview. This establishment would sell semen at a reasonable rate, provided there is a sufficient demand by the farmers to warrant such an undertaking.

State College Answers Timely Farm Questions

Q. What can I do to remove oil that is accidentally spilled into a well?

A. David S. Weaver, head of the Agricultural Engineering department at State college, says, so far as he knows, there is no chemical available on the market that would remove the oil. However, where there is only a small amount of oil in the water, continued pumping will probably remove it.

There will be no serious damage done by the oil until it is removed, he says, other than altering the taste and staining of white clothes that are washed with the water from the well.

Q. How can I control domestic mosquitoes?

A. Since domestic mosquitoes breed in so many places, it is important to make frequent inspections of the premises and eliminate, as far as possible, all temporary water containers. Tin cans, bottles, jars, old tires, and the like should be promptly disposed of. A good practice for every housewife to follow is to see that every tin can has holes punched in the bottom or has both ends removed and the can flattened. Eaves' troughs should be examined occasionally to see that they are not stopped up or sagged so that they will hold water. Likewise flat roofs should be examined after rains to see that water is not held on them. Cesspools and septic tanks must be tightly covered, that is, so as to exclude all mosquitoes.

Rain barrels or tubs in which water is stored are often the source of hordes of mosquitoes. Cisterns, whether above or below ground, often breed many of these pests. Often cisterns breed mosquitoes in profusion. These should be tightly covered or screened, and the spouts must be screened also. Water pans and troughs used for chickens water should be emptied once a week and thoroughly washed. Mosquitoes often breed in puddles of water allowed to drain under the house from refrigerators. Rain water, and water allowed to leak from hydrants and to form pools in the yard, are sources also. These pools can usually be eliminated by improved drainage.
