U. S. Agency Ends Debate On How Far Out Is Gulf Stream

MOREHEAD CITY.—A perpetual question along the North Carolina coast in recent years has been, "How Far is the Gulf Stream from various points along the state's ocean shoreline?" The question has been asked so many times since Gulf Stream fishing has become such a popular sport and profitable enterprise for North Carolina, that the chamber of commerce here requested Senator William B. Umstead's office in Washington to get the authentic data from the U. S. Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Usually when the matter of how far the stream of blue and warm water, which originates in the Gulf of Mexico and moves northward along the Atlantic coast, is from the North Carolina mainland, a variety of answers would be given. Sometimes press dispatches have indicated that the Gulf Stream was only a matter of 20 miles off shore, while some of the local skippers, have said that it was actually 75 to 100 miles.

Actually, according to the report that Senator Umstead received from the U. S. Coast and Geodetic Survey, the government organization which keeps track of the ocean's depths, the Gulf Stream is only 30 nautical miles from Morehead City, and that, roughly, is 35 statute miles. From Cape Lookout, the Gulf Stream is only 20 miles nautical, or 23 statute miles.
