Another 'First' for Textiles

The cotton textile industry was one of the first in America to undergo complete electrification and to South Carolina—to Columbia, in fact—belongs the credit of having the first completely electrically-operated mill. Above Mrs. John G. Hipp of Belton, looks at one of the original 65-horsepower motors installed in the Columbia Mills in 1894, the real beginning of industrial development of the South. The heavy motor is kept on the museum grounds at Charleston, S. C.
