

Small Forest Management Discussed In New Bulletin

The South's 1,500,000 farmers and other owners of small woodlots, most of which average about 75 acres, can learn much about how to manage their forest properties, both for current cash and future profits, from Farmers' Bulletin No. 1989, "Managing the Small Forest," publication of which was announced recently by the U. S. Forest Service.

The bulletin reports that timber is scarce "almost everywhere in the world," that forest products are bringing high prices, and says, "there never was a better time to make a small forest pay."

Yet in 1945, it goes on to say, "71 per cent of the small owners cut their trees in such a way that the cut-over land had almost no timber values left and either could not grow a new forest at all or could do so only with difficulty" while "only 4 per cent cut wisely, leaving their forests able not only to grow but to improve."

It is written in non-technical, easily read style, and illustrated with well chosen pictures and charts. Beginning with a brief description of what a healthy, producing small forest should look like, the booklet takes up the business of forest management from the culture of trees already on the land, or the planting of new forests, to the

Violets, Spring Flower, In Bloom At Thanksgiving

Indicative of the unusually warm weather this community has experienced this fall is a bunch of wild violets in bloom, on display in The Press office window. The blue flowers were found November 21 by Mrs. F. E. Mashburn on the Carl D. Moses place in the Ellijay community. She brought them to The Press office for display.

'Bus Parties' Offered Tourists In Asheville

Example of imaginative resort promotion is the "Gay 90's" bus parties put on this summer in Asheville. As one answer to the tourist question:

"What is there to do in this town after dark?" the local bus company promoted a 30-mile tour of Asheville and nearby scenic roads. Bus stops and picks up guests at their hotels. Aboard is a lively string band. Stops for drinks are made at road houses and there is a master of ceremonies aboard. Charge $1.10.
