Ladino Clover
On Increase; Promiscuous Buying Is Dangerous

A Gaston county farmer, D. C. Kiser, has found that use of half-acre of ladino clover pasture for grazing has cut feed costs for his poultry by approximately one-fourth, report Wright F. Parker, assistant county agent for the State college extension service.

Mr. Kiser seeded two pounds of Ladino on half an acre in September, 1947, for the purpose of grazing his small poultry flock. He began grazing the plot with 150 hens on March 1. In May he took the hens off to allow the Ladino to get a little more growth. He is now using the plot for 150 pullets which are three months old.

The hens which Mr. Kiser keeps have made an outstanding record. They are New Hampshire R. O. P. candidates. They began laying early in September, 1947, and have averaged better than 65 per cent production since that time.
