Five Suggestions Listed For Cutting Food Budget

by HELEN HALL
Chairman, National Association of Consumers

Five good suggestions for cutting pennies, and even dollars from your food budget were given us by nutrition experts in the Department of Agriculture in Washington. So many women had asked us if we knew any tricks for cutting food expenses that we went right to the experts to get specific answers. Because meat takes such a large portion of your food dollar every week, four suggestions remind us how to buy meat, how to use meat, and how to stretch meat. First there are meat extenders: stews with crusts, pot pies, and meat-noodle combinations. This way one pound of meat makes a nourishing main dish for a family of four. Then, remember meat alternates. Fish is a good buy generally, and there is little waste on fish because it does not "cook away." Cheese is another meat alternate, and a good buy right now. Eggs, too, are plentiful, and eight large eggs make a pound, giving you as much protein as a pound of beef.

Third, the differential in price between economy cuts and luxury cuts of meat is even wider than normally. Generally, there is no more bone or fat on economy cuts like breast, than there is on luxury chops. You should, of course, turn all fat into an asset, and that is a fourth money-saving suggestion. Save all used cooking fat that comes out when meat is cooked, and sell it to your meat dealer. Kitchen salvage not only adds pennies to your budget, but subtracts dollars from your plumber's bills for opening clogged drains. Finally, there is a great budget advantage in using standard rather than fancy grades of canned goods. Standard grade peas, for instance, cost about one-fourth as much as fancy peas, and are just as nutritious, appetizing and palatable.

Five tricks for cutting food budgets:

- 1—Use meat extenders
- 2—Buy meat alternates
- 3—Use economy cuts of meat
- 4—Salvage used cooking fat
- 5—Purchase standard grades of canned goods

State College Hints To Farm Homemakers

Food prejudices are not only expensive; they may also lead to malnutrition. Any who avoids many foods is in danger of not getting all the nutrients needed for health. Adults in the family should make a special effort to like all foods and to avoid discussions of foods before children. Children are easily influenced against foods by the attitudes and dislikes of their elders and they may carry these prejudices all their lives. Children in nursery schools quickly learn to eat food set before them because child guidance specialists do not indulge their whims by offering alternate foods or by arguing about them.

Fine linen handkerchiefs are precious possessions these days when linen and other fine fabrics "come high" in the stores. To make handkerchiefs last longer, textile scientists offer some suggestions about buying and care: Buying: The more even and compact the weave and weight of the handkerchief, the greater its chance of survival. Embroidered initials, open work and hand-hemstitching add to the appearance and cost and unfortunately also make the handkerchief more fragile. The first break often comes at the hemstitching where the fabric is thinner, or around initials where the embroidery is so much heavier than the surrounding linen. Hand-rolled edges are less sturdy than stitched hems.

Laundry: Wash handkerchiefs before they are badly soiled. They need little or no rubbing to become clean. An hour's soak in cool suds will loosen the soil and save strenuous washing. If handkerchiefs are washed in the machine along with other clothes, it is a good idea to tie them in a loose cheesecloth bag and let them go through both washer and wringer in the

State College Answers Timely Farm Questions

Q. Is it advisable to raise the first calf of a heifer?

A. It makes absolutely no difference in the quality of the heifer calf whether she is the first or a later one. Sometimes the first calf may be slightly smaller than calves born later, but even this is not necessarily true. At any rate, it would not affect the animal's future production.

Q. How much aging does beef need before it goes into locker storage?

A. Aging the freshly slaughtered carcass for a week or 10 days in a chill room increases the natural tenderness of the meat. Longer aging is often used, but it allows for the development of stale odors from bag.

If properly washed and thoroughly rinsed and sundried, handkerchiefs should need no bleaching which is apt to be hard on the fabric. Boiling should be necessary only in case of colds or contagious diseases.

Pin handkerchiefs to the line on top of a towel and leave them only until dry.

the growth of mold on the surface of the meat. Aging longer than 10 days appears unnecessary for beef which is to be further tenderized by freezing.

BRINGS BUSINESS
to Franklin Concern
from
. . . Man in Boston, Mass.

In its display advertisement in The Press last week, Franklin Frozen Foods, Inc., devoted just two lines to the fact that it would have ice cold watermelons for sale over the July 4 week-end.

In far off Boston, Hubert S. Steele, preparing to come to Franklin to spend the week-end with his brother, Walter A. Steele, got his copy of The Press and sat down to read it. When he came across the ice cold watermelon ad, it made his mouth water. . . .

And when he got to Franklin, his first suggestion to his brother was:

"Let's go down to Franklin Frozen Foods and get some of those ice cold watermelons."

They did.
