State-College Answers | Timely Farm Questions

Q. How often should chickens be culled?

A. Culling is an almost continuous process. Cockerels that are to be raised for breeders should be first culled when eight to twelve weeks old. The first culling of pullets may be done at the same time. All through the growing period the birds should be watched carefully and any cockerels or pullets lacking vigor or developing noticeably slower than the others should be discarded.

With laying hens the time of most rigid culling is toward the end of the laying season. This period under normal conditions occurs from July to November. The bird that has been properly fed and which goes into a molt in June, July or August should be culled out of the average flock. The earlier the molt, the more rigid the culling should be. Since the most efficient production comes through continuous culling, some culling is needed each month in the year.

Q. How should I prepare beets for canning?

A. Only baby beets should be canned. Before washing the beets, trim off the tops leaving one inch of stem and all of root. Wash them carefully to remove dirt and grit. Cover with boiling water and boil until skins slip easily. This usually requires 15 to 25 minutes, depending on the size of the beets. After the beets have boiled, skin and trim them. Baby beets can be canned whole; medium or large ones should be cut in 1/2 inch slices, halved or quartered. Pack them hot into hot jars to 1/2 inch of the top, then cover with fresh, boiling water leaving 1/2 inch head space. Add 1 teaspoon salt to each quart jar, adjust lid and process for 25 minutes for pints and 55 minutes for quarts in a pressure canner at 10 pounds of pressure.

State College Hints To Farm Homemakers

By RUTH CURRENT
State Home Demonstration Agent

If you have a tough time breaking in a new pair of shoes, don't blame it all on the shoes. Are you sure you are wearing the right size? If you are wearing the same size you were five or six years ago, your shoes may be too small. Pediatricists say their files are full of case histories of those who have been wearing wrong size shoes for years. Your hurting, aching and tired feet may come from more than just newness of shoes.

Perhaps you would like to have these rules issued by a foot specialist when you buy your next pair of shoes: (1) Never tell the salesman your size and let it go at that. You're grown up now, it's true; but your feet may have grown a half-size since you bought your last shoes. That's only one-sixth of an inch, you know! (2) Have both your feet measured in a standing position. The two feet usually differ in size, and they're longer when you stand than when you're seated.

(3) Examine the materials of the shoe carefully. Are the uppers made of soft leather which won't constrict your feet? Are the soles of genuine leather—flexible enough to give your feet free play? If not, you may be stepping toward trouble.

(4) Make sure the shoes are roomy in the front part and snug at the heel. You should be able to wiggle your toes freely inside the shoes. If you can't, they're too short, and you'll have breaking-in trouble aplenty.

Be sure clothes are entirely dry before packing them for summer travel, clothing specialists caution. If clothes are even slightly damp from pressing or from a humid atmosphere, they will wrinkle badly in a suitcase and may even mildew. Mildew can ruin clothes in a hurry given dampness, darkness, and warmth.

It's a wise precaution to take a look at stored clothing occasionally during the summer to be sure no mildew has started. This is a tip especially for those who live near the seashore or in a damp warm summer climate.

Farmers sold about 10.4 billion dollars worth of crops and livestock in the first five months of 1948.
