State College Answers Timely Farm Questions

Q. How much labor is needed to detassel one acre of hybrid seed corn?
A. About 20 to 30 man-hours.
Q. Can tassels be removed too early?
A. As long as the whole tassel can be removed without removing more than one leaf, there is very little danger to the plant. The tassel should be developed sufficiently to permit removal of the whole tassel, rather than the tip of the branches.
Q. Does detasseling require daily trips through the field?
A. It usually does. The main purpose is to prevent shedding. Tassels missed one day will likely be shedding by the second day.
Q. Does seed from improperly detasseled fields look different from that of properly detasseled fields?

A. No. It is the invisible characteristics that are made different. This becomes visible in a field planted to improperly bred seed.
Q. How can a producer who has done a good job of detasseling corn be assured of marketing high quality seed?
A. By harvesting early, drying promptly, and treating the grain, cribs, etc., with DDT to keep weevils under control. Old grain should not be overlooked. Grain that is now stored on the farm may be breeding-up a population of insects that will later move to your new crop in the field. If the grain cannot be sold or treated, a DDT spray used on the walls, ceiling, doorway, and on old sacks used to cover the grain should prove helpful in keeping the insects at home.
