ing the month. The U. S. Department of Agriculture places dairy foods at the top of the plentiful list because milk production reaches a peak in June. This is the season when milk is in best supply for direct consumption and for manufacture into cheese, butter, evaporated milk, and non-fat dry milk solids.

Dairy foods are not the only plentiful for June though. Broilers and fryers, fish, dried beans and peas, peanut butter, and eggs are all on the list. All of these, plus the dairy foods, are considered sources of high quality protein, Miss Corry said.

Vegetables listed include canned peas, canned corn, Irish potatoes, lettuce, and cabbage.

Fruits include canned mixed fruits, canned apricots, and canned peaches. Stocks of canned mixed fruits in canners' and wholesalers' hands are more than double holdings at this time last year, while canned peaches are among the most reasonably priced canned foods on today's market, the home agent stated.

Other plentiful listed for June are corn meal, grits, sirup, oat products, and honey.
