HEALTH OFFICER CITES N. C. LAW

Seeks Cooperation in Immunization of Children

With the number of children immunized against diphtheria continuing to grow, Dr. M. B. H. Michal, district health officer, this week called the public's attention to the state laws governing immunizations.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Gladys Mae Shope, county health nurse, reported that 51 additional children were given the diphtheria "shots" at the health department's regular clinic last Saturday, 37 more at Monday's clinic, and that about 225 were immunized at the Cullasaja school at a school examination and clinic held there last week.

The law, Dr. Michal pointed out, requires the parent or guardian of every child in North Carolina to have the child immunized against diphtheria and whooping cough between the ages of six months and one year. It also forbids any teacher to accept a child in school without certificates showing these immunizations, plus a certificate of vaccination against smallpox. The law makes violation a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine or imprisonment, or both.

"It is important to remember," Dr. Michal said, that infants between six months and one year of age "is very susceptible to all contagious diseases, and that he responds very well to immunization procedure. Also at this age any reaction to immunization is mild, therefore let us keep in mind that our child needs complete immunization against whooping cough and diphtheria.

"Let's protect our children at the age they need it most and when their reaction to the immunization is the least. The longer we put it off, the harder for them and, if begun after one year of age, we have neglected our duty as parents. None of us want to be reminded of our duty by law enforcement."

BEEF CATTLE PAY BEST IN THIS REGION

Extension Specialist Cites Records Of 250 Farms

Beef cattle were the most profitable enterprise in 250 units demonstration farms in Western Carolina during 1948, according to T. K. Jones, farm management specialist at State college. Mr. Jones bases this statement on a summary of demonstration farm record books from 14 counties.

Dairy farms ranked second in profitability, followed by truck, tobacco, poultry, and general in the order named.

Farm income, the difference between receipts and expenses, averaged $1961 on 34 beef farms and only $964 on 64 general farms. With interest charges on investment deducted, operators of the beef farms received $1188 for their labor and management, compared with $402 on general farms. Including the value of farm products used in the home, the beef cattle farmers earned $2146 while the general farmers earned $1300.

Mr. Jones says the beef cattle farms were the most profitable because they had a larger business than any other type and because they had a good combination of enterprises. They had a larger average acreage of open land and more animal units of livestock. Open land averaged 88.6 acres on beef farms compared with 56.8 on dairy farms. The beef cattle farmers had 22.2 animal units of livestock while the dairy farmers had 14.2.

The beef farmers had a larger acreage of burley tobacco than any other type except the tobacco farms. Mr. Jones points out that tobacco is a good enterprise to combine with beef cattle; it is an intensive enterprise requiring little land and a great deal of labor, while beef cattle require considerable land and little labor.

The analyst adds that failure of the tobacco farms to earn high incomes was not the fault of the tobacco enterprise. The tobacco farmers, he says, failed to add enough supplementary enterprises which would have returned more income through fuller utilization of available land, labor, and capital.
