his father implanted the wisdom of it.
By the time he was 12 years old, he was rising at 5 a. m., milking (by hand) his father's herd before school hours. In the afternoon, he was again coaxing the best production from the Addingon herd — purebred Guernseys, by the way, which his father began establishing on his farm in 1925.

"Modern milking machines are wonderful things!" A. B. Addingon says today.

But far from developing a distaste for the hard work of farming, when it came time for college, A. B. chose N. C. State College—to study agriculture.

He intended at that time to return to the farm when he finished school, and kept this plan until he was nearly through, when he was called into service with a heavy bomber group during World War II.

Discharged from service three and one-half years later, he finished his agricultural courses, majoring in livestock husbandry.

"Dairying and livestock farming will play a big part in this State's future agriculture," State College and Extension Service leaders told him. "In order to add such enterprises to their farms and make them successful, farmers will need assistance."

A. B. Addingon got the picture. Somehow, he also recalled a certain "Old Doc Brownlow"—a faithful old servant of the rural communities, who went when he was called, and did what he could to solve problems.

- How well his background, training, and ingrained reasoning have fitted him for farm agent work can be judged by some of the plain standards which every farm agent sets for himself:
1. To do a lot of good for a lot of people.
 2. To feel a genuine interest in the welfare of rural people.
 3. To be willing to work in their behalf—not merely for the pay received, but to get the jobs done co-operatively and effectively.
 4. To continue the study of

State Spending Grows; 27 Top $100 Per Capita

More than half the states in the Union—27 to be exact—had total expenditures for all purposes in 1951 of more than $100 for every one of their inhabitants, according to a study recently made public by the U. S. Bureau of Census.

Two of these states, Delaware and Washington, spent the equivalent of more than $200 per capita last year, the first time this level has been reached in state expenditure records.

The growth of spending at the state level is indicated by the fact that only one year before, in 1950, there were 17 states with per capita expenditures of $100 and more, ten fewer than in 1951. In 1949 there were only 11 states in this spending bracket. As an average, total expenditures of the 48 state governments were the equivalent of more than $100 per capita in 1951, as compared with $89 in 1950 and $81 in 1949. Back in 1940, per capita state expenditures averaged only $41.

The only newspaper in the world devoted exclusively to Macon County is The Franklin Press.
