

Drunk Driving Fines Totaled Some $4,000 At Court Here

GET 7 YEARS SUSPENDED SENTENCES

August Superior Court Session Closes Here On Saturday

Drunk driving isn't only risky—but costly.

Defendants charged with driving intoxicated handed over approximately $4,000 in fines during the August term of superior court, which adjourned here Saturday.

And that isn't all—those same defendants amassed almost seven years in suspended sentences, not to mention that each one so charged lost his driver's license for one year.

The minimum fine for drunk driving (and almost all of the defendants pleaded guilty, waiving the finding of a true bill by the grand jury) is 90 days suspended sentence on payment of $100 and costs, and revocation of driver's license for one year. Court costs in a drunk driving case average about $40.

Court was recessed Tuesday of last week after both the criminal and civil dockets had been acted upon and the session was closed Saturday without anymore cases coming up for trial. The presiding judge, William H. Bobbitt, of Charlotte, returned to his home soon after Tuesday's recess.

Following are the dispositions of cases coming before the court since August 19:

Elmer Taylor, drunk driving, $100 and costs.

SAYS TEACHER IS IMPORTANT

School Supt. Addresses Rotary Club On Power Of Education

"The most important person in our community is the classroom teacher." Holland McSwain, Macon County superintendent of schools, told members of the Franklin Rotary club at their weekly dinner meeting August 20.

Speaking on "The Power of Education", Mr. McSwain declared the dropping of the first atom bomb, about seven years ago, marked the end of one world, and the birth of another—a new world, as far as ideas and thinking are concerned.

He recalled the predictions of disaster and world destruction that followed development of the bomb, but pointed out that similar predictions had been made after the discovery or invention of each new weapon, and he cited, among others, the discovery of a way to make fire, the invention of gunpowder, and development of poison gas. In each case, he said, a defense was developed.

Back of all these weapons, he commented, was fear—they were developed because of fear of those who had got out of line, and it was hoped that fear of these new weapons would force those who had got out of line back in line.

"Looking back, we can see that fear is not an adequate motive to get man to want and build a decent civilization..."

Turning then to the economic standards of the people of the world, he said that 90 per cent of the world's population has an average annual income of about $200 a year.

Dividing the wealth, he said, is not the answer; a division of the world's wealth would increase this average income only about $10 a year.

"The people of the world must be people of the world must be educated so they can raise their income by their own efforts."

Illustrating the relationship between education and economic progress, he cited nation after nation, among them Colombia, one of the wealthiest nations in the world in natural resources, but a nation that spends little for education and has a very low average income; and Denmark, a land of few natural resources, but one where vast sums are spent on education, and one where the standard of living is very high.

Even in the United States, he said, "we find the lowest average income in the states and in the counties that spend least on education."

He referred to the great power that education—the wrong kind of education—gave the leaders of totalitarianism in Germany, Italy, and Japan—and commented that constructive education can be even more powerful.

But when "the United States doesn't spend as great a percentage of its income on education as Russia does" and "when we spend far more money in the United States for alcoholic beverages than we do for education," he wondered if we realize the importance and the power of education.

"Our schools can solve the problem."

"Let's see that we have the best teachers possible, the best educational program possible, and that every child—every child everywhere—has a chance to get the best education possible."

North Carolina's 1952 corn crop is the smallest since 1944.

Corn hybrids have increased yields by at least 30 per cent, or three-quarters of a billion bushels, annually.

Nelson Jones, drunk driving, 90 days suspended, $100 and costs, driver's license revoked for one year.

Clarence A. Addis, drunk driving, and carrying concealed weapon, called and failed, capias issued.

Marvin McDowell, drunk driving, called and failed, capias issued.

J. R. Lunsford, no driver's license, called and failed, capias issued.

J. T. Moses, no driver's license, 30 days suspended, $25 and costs.

Robert Lamb, transporting whiskey and abduction, called and failed, capias issued.
