Observer Reports Rainfall

In Highlands Area; Average

Is 10 Inches Below Normal

Miss Gertrude Harbison, weather observer at the U. S. weather station located two and one half miles south of Highlands, has reported that for the 41 day period from September 20 through November 1, there were only 1.02 inches of rainfall, occurring on October 8, 9, and 10.

This long dry spell, following a dry summer, with one of the home in Union Point, Ga., for the winter.

driest, as well as hottest June on record, accounts for the present near drought conditions, Miss Harbison said. She also reported that strange as it may seem, the first of November finds this region with the rainfall for this year thus far only 10 inches below normal. A total of 60.95 inches was recorded up to November 1, or for the first 10 months of the year.

This is explained by the fact that up to June 1, rainfall was well above normal, with excessive precipitation for March, the observer said. However, much of the precipitation this year has occurred in the form of very heavy rains, which have run off rapidly and not penetrated the soil, Miss Harbison added.

The normal yearly rainfall for the Highlands area is approximately 85 inches, according to the observer.
