to provide radar which presumably would furnish all the information needed on the movements of hostile aircraft. Will you tell me why there is a need for a Ground Observer Corps in addition to radar? A. A radar unit is indeed a marvelous piece of equipment. It is very complicated, how-ever, and may become inoperative at an inopportune moment, just as your television set does when you have the neighbors in to watch an interesting program. Radars are susceptible to jamming by an attacking which would greatly impair their usefulness at a time they would be most needed. In spite of these difficulties, radar is by far the best way of following the movements of aircraft at high altitudes Even when radars are working perfectly, they do not do a good job of following the movements pected disaster. Waiting until of aircraft at low altitudes. This war is declared before imple- is true because the electronic menting air defense measures omissions from radar sets are would be comparable to wait- reflected upwards when they strike the earth's surface. This results in gaps between radars that sometimes go higher than 5.000 feet, where there will be is being spent by the air force no knowledge of aircraft movements at all unless this information is provided by ground observers. The ground observer method is superior for obtaining information of the movements of low flying aircraft. Q. It is difficult for me to understand how my observation post is going to have much influence on the protection of my community. The attacking planes will be here and gone before we will be able to do anything.

A. The ground observers in any one community are providing information which may aid neighboring communities. It is a mutual assistance organization where each group depends on all other groups. If every observation post does its job well, all communities, including yours, will have additional protection against attacking aircraft that they would not have without the Ground Observer Corps.

McGlamery Says Two-Thirds Of Goal In Sight

B. L. McGlamery, head of the Franklin Chamber of Commerce membership drive, has reported about two-thirds of the $3,000 goal is in sight.

Members of the drive committee met briefly Wednesday night of last week at the Nantahala Power and Light Company building and at that time the sale of memberships totaled

In discussing the progress of the drive, William Katenbrink, C of C president, commented: "Many (businessmen) consider the price of a membership as an outright contribution. They don't seem to realize it is for promotional advertising and acts as stimulus for their business.

An informal meeting of the newly-organized industrial committee was held following the drive meeting. No action was taken, although committeemen discussed a number of ideas in regard to helping industry settle here.
