3 Changes At The Highlands

Biological Station Listed

Three important announcements were made today by the Highlands Biological Station, concerning changes in the hours of the Museum of Natural History, a change in the location of the executive offices from the Weyman Laboratory Building to the museum building, and announcements regarding nature study classes for children.

The museum will be open Mondays through Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 12:00 noon, and from 2 to 5 p.m. The museum will not be open on Sundays. There is no admission.

In announcing the executive offices change, Miss Thelma Howell, executive director of the station, said a number of things contributed to the decision of the trustees to make the change. The small office in the Weyman building was not large enough to take care of the diversified needs of office space for the research activities of the laboratory and the general needs of the corporation, and it was also felt that the location of the museum building was more convenient for those having business transactions with the station, and the added space, including storage needs, available at the museum building was adequate for the needs of the station.

The executive director will be in the office at the museum building on Monday, Wednesday, and Thursday mornings from 10 o'clock until noon, and at other times by appointment. The office at the laboratory will also be maintained for the co-ordination of the research program and activities of the station. Mrs. Elot Caziarc will work in the executive office, as well as assist the curator of the museum, Hugh A. Sargent.

Mr. Sargent calls attention to the first nature study class for children, ages 6 to 14 years, on Tuesday morning, June 23, at 10 o'clock. Classes will meet each Tuesday and Thursday morning through August 27. There are no charges for children of members of the Highlands Biological Station and for children attending the Highlands Public School. For others, season tickets are on sale at the museum for $2; single admission 25 cents. In the nature study classes, the relationship between the forms of nature are stressed by lectures, movies, and films.

Two new features have been added to the activities of the museum. Boys and girls over 14 years may work out special projects with the curator. Certain exhibits will be changed at frequent intervals in order to correlate materials with the evening lecture series for adults. The first of these lectures will be given on Friday evening, June 26, on "The Geological Story of North Carolina."

In order to familiarize the public with certain points to be covered in the lecture, the minerals of North Carolina, particularly Macon County, are currently being prominently displayed at the museum.

Investigations at the laboratory are currently being conducted by Dr. L. R. Hesler, University of Tennessee; Dr. A. E. Radford and J. G. Hasselup, University of North Carolina; Dr. Wilbur H. Duncan, University of Georgia; Dr. M. J. Westfall, University of Florida; and Richard L. Hoffman, Blacksburg, Virginia. The objects of these investigations cover fungi, vascular plants, dragonflies, damselflies, and millipeds.

News Making

ing is more essential to our future welfare than that we have a resourceful, industrious, well educated group of farmers. Why not, then, do all that we can to make this the most attractive field for the young men and women of tomorrow. In the past there have been those who have looked down their noses at the farmer, thrice shame on them.
