Kerr Scot will again go to the farmers for his support. Due to farm conditions at present he will undoubtedly make a strong plea that we need in the Senate today some one who is familiar with the agricultural problems of today, and some one who will stand up and be heard from when they speak in behalf of the farmer.

forthcoming decision of the U. S. Supreme Court on segrega-tion, he did remark: "I think I have answered that question three or four times, but as long as you want to scribble down what I say, I'll keep on saying it". That comment was accompanied by the trace of a grin.

And having answered the question, he went on to discuss in detail the way "the law is a growing, living thing".

conscious that people are wondering about his health; for I sity because of their love for thought I detected a note of the school and for their work. pride in his voice when he told us, in the course of the press conference, that he usually is at his office, at work, by o'clock in the morning. (He did not say whether he takes a break in the middle of the day.

It was to be expected of him, as of any man in political life, that he would be gracious in welcoming the students to the conference. He was more than that—sympathetic, patient, en-couraging, when he invited them to ask questions.

Perhaps because he is so thin, some of Governor Umstead's pictures make him look sour, and so what surprised me perhaps most of all about him is that he seems to have a defithough not boisterous. sense of humor. There was considerable banter in his questionand-answer exchanges with the losina has today. regular reporters, whom he has come to know and call by their first names since his inauguration last January. And he pretended great embarrassment when we caught him without a coat, his vest unbuttoned-not because we saw him that way. but because he spied a news my coat on when somebody brings one of those machines in here"—indicating the camera.

We persuaded him to remain coatless until the end of the conference, when he donned his coat and posed for two pictures with the students.

At the close of the conference, about an hour of questions and answers ending at 4:30 in the afternoon, Mr. Umstead appeared no more tired than the average man at that hour of the afternoon.

Nothing sensational came out of the conference, but I found one answer of considerable interest.

A student, pointing out that one of the deans at the University is leaving to accept a better-paying job, asked the Governor what North Carolina educational institutions can do to compete with the offers of private industry for their best brains.

"We can do the best we can in pay", the Governor said, "and then hope love for the institution and for the work will hold" these educators.

He recalled that when he was a student at Chapel Hill, there were a number of professors The Governor may be a bit three times as much elsewhere,

He added that he doubts if educational institutions ever will be able to compete, on equal terms, with private business.

The situation as to public school teachers was not discuss-ed, but presumably the same thing would be true of them.

If it is, it occurs to me that we are "barking up the wrong tree' when we seek to solve the teacher shortage problem by salary raises alone; we are going to have to provide some other compensations-some reasons why the teachers should love the schools and their work.

I would suggest that two of them well might be a renewed respect, by the public, for knowledge, for itself; and a far reater freedom than any public school teacher in North Car-
