Bablin' About Writing With H-Bombs

J. P. Brady

THINGS OTHER THAN CANDY ARE STICKY

Dean Carpenter, the hairy (and who ain't these days?) proprietor of one of the main drag drug stores, sends along this contribution to the centennial "Brothers of the Brush".

RECAPPING NEW TIRES RADIATOR REPAIRS RICKMAN'S O. K. RUBBER WELDERS AND RADIATOR SHOP

"My Rose!" he whispered tenderly, as he pressed her velvet cheek to his.

"My cactus," she said, as she dodged his whiskers.

And while on the subject of beards, I've been wondering for a week what happened to the young married man, who commented to friends in the presence of his wife:

"I'm ashamed of my mustache . . . my wife has one better than mine and she's not even in the contest."

If the young man who said this is still alive (and from the frosty look his wife gave him the odds are he isn't) would you please get in touch with this column at once. Such brazen bravery deserves recognition of the highest order.

BUT EVERYONE COULD READ YOUR MAIL

It seems to me that, in all of this present day rush to dominate the world of the atom, scientists have overlooked the most important facet of the H-Bomb.

Newspaper accounts (and we must accept them as the gospel because no sane person would be caught alive near an H-Bomb) tell us that in some of the H-Bomb explosions the column of smoke went miles and miles into the air. And that is the thing the scientists apparently have overlooked in their zeal to keep making bigger and better bangs with the bomb.

Just imagine what an Indian smoke writer could do with a column of smoke that rises miles and miles into the air! Bet you never have stopped to think what a dandy time an Indian smoke writer could have, have you?

To be truthful, if this as yet unexplored course for the H-Bomb were studied, I would bet a couple of million eons that it would completely revolutionize the entire communications set-up in the country.

Just think, where today it takes a letter about five or six days to span the United States, any half-way efficient Indian smoke writer with an H-Bomb could unfold his trusty old blanket and have New York and California exchanging messages in no time at all.

Of course, there would be some minor problems to iron out before the Brady Union Rapid Publicity System (BURPS, in the governmental vernacular) could be used to any degree of efficiency.

First off, the problem of sending long messages would have to be licked. As things stand now, a BURPS smoke writer would be like a piece of one-shot carbon and even the fastest could probably just eek out the "U" in ugh! before joining the cloud of smoke. Naturally, a problem of this kind would be simple to solve. Two logical approaches would be: (1) have a whole flock of smoke writers with each charged with the responsibility of sending just one letter in the message. As each succeeding writer joins the column of smoke and his maker, the next would rush in with his trusty blanket and supply the next letter. This, of course, would be terribly hard on the supply of smoke writers, but even at that it beats the wireless; or (2) condense the entire English language into single letters. Let, for example, the letter "R" stand for the message, "Having wonderful time, wish you were here", or something similar.

Now here's the real beauty of BURPS. Either of the above approaches would help the unemployment situation and would give the government something it could really sink its teeth in. It could come up with a new bureau, maybe — Bureau for Retention of Reckless Smoke Writers — or set up a new commission under Civil Service to revamp the language to fit BURPS.

Then again, it might be possible to start a governmental program of letting folks who want to commit suicide train as smoke writers. They could be cheaply trained since they would only have to learn one letter and the government probably could stimulate world trade by buying one-shot Indian blankets from orphaned Arabs.

You see? It's not a program to be sneezed at.

But the real solution is for nations to stop all of this H-Play (horse play) with the H-Bomb and try to get along with each other.

This would mean abandoning BURPS and going back to the old system of using the mails for communication, but I'm inclined to think it would be worth it, don't you?

There's even more to Chevrolet styling than meets the eye!

This is beauty with a bonus . . . for Chevrolet styling is designed to add safety and comfort while you drive, and to return greater value when you trade.

Truly modern lines are shaped by usefulness. You can see what we mean in the deep crystal curve of Chevrolet's Sweep-Sight windshield . . . a dramatic style note, certainly, but one that stems from the need for wider, safer vision. Or take high-set taillights—they add to the impressive length of line . . . but they are up where they can be seen for safety's sake.

The smart louvers across the hood aren't just decoration . . . they mark the intake for the High-Level ventilation system for cleaner, fresher air. And the whole shape of the body—its lowness, the dipped belt line—is merely a reflection of a lowered center of gravity, the added stability.

This is truly functional styling that serves you better every mile, and preserves its value against the distant day when you trade. This is Body by Fisher—another Chevrolet exclusive in the low-price field. Come in and let us demonstrate that this new Chevrolet is just as exciting to drive as to look at!
