

ZEB IS OUT THIS TIME TO END PARIS
The unpredictable Zeb Angel is at it again.
You will recall that it was Zeb who set the Sunday afternoon carriage trade agog a couple of months back by appearing on Franklin's conservative Main Street wearing a pair of Bermuda shorts.
On the fourth, Sir Zeb was again on the street and again flabbergasting the motoring public.
He was wearing those same old Bermuda shorts, but (Paris fashion experts, please note) this time his accessories included a black Stetson and combat boots.
"Oh! Zeb knows all about these styles," he explained, his jaw drooping for a wise wink of the eye.

How It's All Over Now
J. P. Brady

"Daddy's beard's in the wastebasket," is the method my learned and loquacious two-and-a-half-year-old youngster, Steve, uses to inform anyone who cares to listen that the Franklin Centennial is all over.

And that's an improvement for him. With the timed disappearance of my mustache and "mutton chops" (the wife greeted me at the front door with a razor in the dying hours of the celebration) it took a couple of days for Steve to shake off the tendency to point at me when I arrived for lunch and ask his mother, "Who's that man?"

Through a series of gestures (faintly resembling shaving) and some fatherly lectures (the birds and bees come next) I finally convinced him the old man was part of the homestead.

His "Daddy's beard's in the wastebasket" bit followed.

By next week I should be fully reinstated at the kitchen table.

But, now that it's over, I miss all the hullabaloo that went with staging the Centennial. Things are just dull, that's what! They've even carted away the "caliboose", and save for an excess of chewing gum wrappers blowing around and some beards (couldn't get 'em to grow 'em for a while and now can't get 'em to cut 'em off) the whole thing is as wisp and elusive as a puff of cigarette smoke. It's already becoming hard to remember actually what did take place during the three days of festivities.

Probably what I miss most of all is that natty derby hat I wore for more than three months. Aside from battling a constantly itchy scalp, that derby to me was the Centennial all wrapped up into one felt bundle. As the first hat I'd ever worn, it turned me into a gentleman of the first order (for years I have been a second, or even third). For that I am thankful. I learned what it was like to really be polite to everyone, all because of that derby; Tip it to the men and bow and sweep it to the ladies. That can only be done properly with a derby. You'd feel mighty stupid bowing with a summer straw or porkpie, but the old faithful derby is the key to courtesy—at least as far as I'm concerned.

Even now, when walking down the street, I find myself having to fight off the urge to reach for the now-absent derby and bow to the ladies.

AND I'LL ALMOST BET HE CAN MOO, TOO.

We had our slip really showing during the Centennial—the newspaper that is.

And at any other time but then (thanks to the confusion) half the population would have laughed us out of town.

This fluff concerned a bull—a real oddity by Franklin Press engineering.

Through proofreading error, it was reported that said bull, a robust young turf-pounder with the sterling name of Belmont View Primer King, "has a production record of 10,011 pounds of milk and 457 pounds of fat . . ."

Of all the newspapers in the world, The Franklin Press has to be the one to come up with a milk-giving bull.

How this got by us is easily explained. The milk record was the bull's mother and the slip of "he" rather than the obviously correct "she" put us in the glaring spotlight of error.

There's consolation, though, in knowing we didn't put the bull in the position of having had a calf.
